PDF-XChange Editor/Viewer OCR Language Extensions can be used to add support for groups of languages or individual language support based on users needs and to reduce the size of required library files.

How do I perform OCR on documents? How do I convert image-based documents into text-searchable documents? Please note that OCR optical character recognition scans image-based documents, recognizes text and then inserts an invisible text-layer over the text. The text layer contains identical text to that recognized in the document. This means that the original, image-based text in documents can effectively be searched and selected via the invisible text layer, which is the main benefit of OCR. However, it should be noted that the document text cannot be edited in the same manner as normal, text-based documents - as it remains an image-based document, despite the invisible text layer. Follow the steps below to perform OCR: The OCR Pages dialog box will open: Increasing the accuracy increases the time that the process takes and vice versa. Additionally, it should be noted that setting the accuracy to high may result in unusual output if the document on which the operation is carried out features imperfections. This is because the software will search to a greater depth and may attempt to recognise imperfections as text. A good option if you wish to leave the current file unaffected by the process, but would like to test results. Preserve original content and Add Text Layer will do exactly as it implies. This method will not create a new document, and will alter the current document by adding searchable text. Deskewing is a useful feature that straightens images that have been photographed or scanned crookedly. Please note that it is also possible to OCR documents when scanned content or images are used to create PDF documents: The Images to PDF dialog box will open: Add files and determine settings as detailed here. Click Options for further options. The Scan Properties dialog box will open: Determine settings as detailed here. Click Images Insertion Options to determine options for inserted images. Enter the desired page range s in the text box. If this option is selected then use the Images Quality dropdown menu to determine the resolution in dpi dots per inch of the created image. If this mode is used for image-only documents, then the only change will be the resolution of the image when the initial dpi is different from the dpi specified in the Images Quality dropdown menu - otherwise no changes will occur. Please note that output documents from this process will replace input documents. If input documents in their original format will be needed subsequently then a copy should be made before this process is performed. Was this article helpful?
