Updated 26 September One of the most promising capitals of the Brazilian Northeast region, Natal has an economic potential still half explored, what has been attracting a lot of foreigners. Know more about how much a professional would spend while living in this city. Natal is the capital and largest city of Rio Grande do Norte state, located in the extreme Northeast of Brazil. With a population of Famous for its beaches and white sand dunes, Natal has the tourism as its most important economic activity. However, the city is one of the areas that most receive foreign investments , especially in the oil industry Rio Grande do Norte is the second largest oil-producing state in Brazil, only behind Rio de Janeiro , mostly supported by Petrobras SA. Natal also counts with a strong fishing industry and great wind energy potential. Natal is not called the Terra do Sol City of the Sun for nothing. The city has a typical tropical climate, with high temperatures throughout the year. However, the weather is wet and windy, what makes it more comfortable. Anyhow, to live there it is necessary to be adapted with using lots and lots of sunscreen, because the heat never gives a break.

Accommodation When it comes to real estate, Natal is the most expensive Northeast capital. The high demand enhanced by the fact that there is a lot of foreigners acquiring properties in the city brought a lot of speculation to the real estate market. Still, the rent values are much lower than in Southeast capitals. There is a river dividing the city between downtown and the outskirts. In downtown you will find a better quality of life, as the outskirts are completely unstructured and impoverished. The coastal neighborhood of Ponta Negra has the highest concentration of foreign people. Because of tourism, there are a lot of restaurants competing for clients. A good option is the seafood, fresh and cheap all year round. For those who prefer a hamburger, all the main fast food chains are present in the city, predominantly in the largest avenues of Natal.

Highveld Highveld in winter in Gauteng Province north of Johannesburg. The hills in the background are the Magaliesberg, which are generally regarded as the local northern boundary of the Highveld, with the Bushveld beyond. The Central Plateau is divided into several distinctly different regions though with very vague boundaries, largely as a result of the rainfall distribution across South Africa: The wettest and most fertile portion of the Central Plateau is the Highveld, which occupies the central eastern portion of the Plateau. Its southern boundary is often taken to be the Orange River, from where the continuation of the plateau is known as the Great Karoo, except for a small strip just south of Lesotho which is often included in the Highveld. To the west the Highveld fades into the dry savannah of Griqualand West, beyond which lies the Kalahari desert. This boundary is very vague. The Highveld therefore encompasses the entire Free State, and an adjoining strip of the Provinces to the north of it. The land is generally flat or gently undulating. Only a few rocky ridges protrude from this flatness: The Limpopo Lowveld extends southwards, east of the Drakensberg escarpment through Mpumalanga Province and ultimately into eastern Swaziland. The Lowveld used to be known as "fever country" because malaria, carried by mosquitoes, was endemic to almost the entire area. Before the middle of the 20th century, the Lowveld was also home to the tsetse fly, which transmits sleeping sickness to humans and nagana to animals, especially the horses of the travelers trying to reach the Highveld and Witwatersrand Gold Fields from Maputo. The bird life is also astoundingly abundant and varied. This wildlife is particularly concentrated in the Kruger National Park located in the eastern Lowveld areas of Mpumalanga and Limpopo Provinces, along almost the entire border with Mozambique. Bushveld A map of the Bushveld biome in northeastern South Africa. Being defined botanically, it includes much of the Lowveld, and is therefore more extensive than the geographical region generally termed the Bushveld. Compare this map with the one on the right above. The Lowveld partly overlaps with a dry savanna ecoregion known as the Bushveld, a basin characterized by open grasslands with scattered trees and bushes. Elevation varies between metres and about metres above sea level. The Bushveld is one of the largest and best known layered igneous mineral complexes in the world. Covering an area roughly kilometres by kilometres, the Bushveld has extensive deposits of platinum and chromium and significant reserves of copper, fluorspar, gold, nickel, and iron. The northern edge of the Bushveld, where the plains rise to a series of high plateaus and low mountain ranges, form the southern edge of the Lowveld and the Limpopo River Valley in Northern Province. These mountains include the Waterberg, and the Soutpansberg Range. The Soutpansberg Range reaches an elevation of 1, meters before dropping off into the Limpopo River Valley and the border between South Africa and Zimbabwe. West of the Bushveld, Highveld, and Lowveld is the southern basin of the Kalahari Desert, which borders Namibia and Botswana at an elevation of meters to meters. Karoo The western section of South Africa on the inland side of the Cape Fold Mountains is dominated by the Great Karoo, a semi-desert region that is divided by the Great Escarpment into the Upper Karoo at an elevation of 1, m and the Lower Karoo at an elevation of 1, m. Flat topped hills called Karoo Koppies are highly characteristic of the southern and southwestern Great Karoo landscape especially on the Central Plateau. These hills are capped by hard, erosion resistant dolerite sills. This occurred about million years ago, when huge volumes of lava were extruded over most of Southern Africa and adjoining regions of Gondwana, both on the surface and deep below the surface between the sedimentary strata. The resultant bulging of what later became Southern Africa heralded the break-up of Gondwana. Since this massive extrusion of lava, Southern Africa has undergone a prolonged period of erosion exposing the older softer rocks, except where they were protected by a cap of dolerite. This photograph was taken in the western region of the Upper Karoo near Calvinia. Note the general flatness of the arid plains between the koppies. Karoo landscape, showing the shrubland that characterizes most of the Karoo. The mountain range in the far distance is the Nuweberg section of the Great Escarpment. The view is from the Lower Karoo looking northwards. In the southwest, running parallel to the coastline, the mountains of the Cape Fold Belt form a series of ranges that run in the form of an "L" by a series running north-south, and another set running east-west, with the junction between the two at the Cape Peninsula. The north-south ranges, paralleling the Atlantic coastline, include the Cederberg and the Groot Winterhoek and have peaks close to 2, metres high. The east-west ranges, paralleling the southern coastline, include the Swartberg and the Langeberg with peaks exceeding 2, metres. The other boundaries of the Great Karoo are arbitrary and ill-defined. To the north the Karoo grades into even more arid Bushmanland. To the north-east, the Orange River is often regarded as the boundary between Karoo and the Highveld. To the east the Karoo fades into the grasslands of the Eastern Midlands. It is as arid as the Great Karoo, except along the foothills of the Swartberg, which are well-watered by streams that cascade down the mountains. The Little Karoo is the centre of the Ostrich farming industry, especially around the town of Oudtshoorn. A view of the Mngeni River valley near Howick Falls. KwaZulu-Natal is a South African Province that lies entirely below the Great Escarpment, which forms its western and south-western boundaries. The region can be subdivided into three distinct geographic areas. The Great Escarpment, known here as the Drakensberg, together with the Lebombo Mountains in the north form the mountainous regions of the province. Upland savannah near Pietermaritzburg. The coastal regions are typically covered with subtropical thickets, while the deeper ravines and steep slopes of the river valleys host Afromontane Forest. The midlands are covered in moist grasslands with isolated pockets of Afromontane Forest. The north consists, in the main, of moist savanna habitat, whilst the Drakensberg region hosts mostly alpine grassland. A great number of rivers arise in the Drakensberg. These have cut fairly deep valleys, and occasionally gorges, into the KwaZulu-Natal landscape giving the province a very hilly appearance. The largest of the rivers is the Tugela, portion of whose waters are pumped over the Escarpment on to the Highveld to supplement the water supply to the large industrial cities of Gauteng. The province contains rich areas of biodiversity of a range of flora and fauna. South Africa signed the RAMSAR Convention to try to conserve and protect important wetlands because of their importance to habitats and numerous species. The region has a varied yet verdant climate thanks to its diverse, complex topography. Generally, the coast is subtropical with inland regions becoming progressively cooler in winter, but hotter in summer except on the Escarpment. The summer temperatures in Pietermaritzburg are similar to those in Durban, but it is considerably cooler in winter. The Drakensberg can experience heavy winter snow, with light snow occasionally experienced on the highest peaks in summer. The Zululand coastal region, in the north of the province, has a tropical climate with high humidities, supporting many sugar cane farms. Beaches of KwaZulu-Natal are of world-class quality. The warm coastal climate means that visitors are attracted to them all year round. Some of the visitors, however, come for the annual late-autumn or early-winter "sardine run" along the KwaZulu-Natal coastline, south of Durban. Referred to as "the greatest shoal on earth", the sardine run occurs when millions of sardines migrate from their spawning grounds south of the southern tip of Africa northward along the Eastern Cape coastline toward KwaZulu-Natal. They follow a route close inshore, often resulting in many fish washing up on beaches. The huge shoal of tiny fish can stretch for many kilometres; it is preyed upon by thousands of predators, including game fish, sharks, dolphins and seabirds. Usually the shoals break up and the fish disappear into deeper water around Durban. Scientists have been unable to answer many questions surrounding this exceptional seasonal event.

Bushmanland[edit] Typical Bushmanland landscape, emphasising its aridity and overall peneplain flatness. Quiver trees only occur in Bushmanland, and neighbouring Namaqualand, and Southern Namibia, usually widely scattered across the arid landscape, but occasionally in dense enough stands to qualify as Quiver tree "forests", for instance on the outskirts of Kenhardt. In the absence of telephone poles in the treeless plains of Bushmanland Quiver trees are favourite nesting sites for Sociable weavers. Its northern boundary is the Orange River beyond which lies Namibia. In the south it grades into the north-western part of the Great Karoo. To the west lies Griqualand West. It is probably the most inhospitable area in South Africa, because of its aridity, infertile soil and highly saline groundwater. Together with the Kalahari Desert to the north-east, its rainfall is the most highly variable in percentage deviation from the annual average, and its temperature range the greatest difference between the average temperature in January and in July in South Africa. Although the veld is too arid to bloom like that of the West Coast of Namaqualand, even when there is some spring rain, what does appear is highly unusual and often hauntingly beautiful. A highly productive base metal mine on the Aggeneys Farm close to the N14 highway between Uppington and Springbok exploits an ore rich in zinc, lead, copper and silver since Close by, to the east, is Ghaamsberg which has very large zinc deposits, but the ore is low-grade and, therefore, at present, unprofitable to large scale mining. The region is sparsely populated, mainly by Afrikaans speaking people of Nama , and Khoikhoi descent. The original Nama and Khoikhoi languages are spoken in only a few remote areas. The main economic activities are mining, and fishing along the coast. Some of the more prominent towns in this area are Springbok , being the capital of this region, as well as Kleinsee and Koiingnaas , both private mining towns owned by De Beers Diamond Mines. This area is rich in alluvial diamonds , deposited along the coast by the Orange River. Oranjemund is another mining town along this coast, situated in Namibia, but very much on the border. As the name suggests, it is at the mouth of the Orange River which forms the border between South Africa and Namibia. The town of Alexander Bay is located on the opposite side of the river mouth i. Other links crossing the river further upstream are a reintroduced pontoon at Sendelingsdrift in the Richtersveld National Park , and road bridges at Vioolsdrif the main border crossing between the two countries and at the remote border crossing of Onseepkans. A vibrant fishing industry is found along this stretch of the South African west coast, especially in Port Nolloth , which is also a major resort town for people living in the interior of South Africa e. Gauteng , and Hondeklipbaai , or Dogstonebay , so called because of a large boulder outside the town which, when viewed correctly, looks vaguely like a dog sitting down. The copper bangles worn by the Khoikhoi aroused the interests of the Dutch officials of the Dutch settlement established by Jan van Riebeeck in the Cape in Several expeditions were consequently mounted to find the source of this copper. A mineshaft was dug in the "Copper Mountains" in northern Namaqualand in , which can still be seen near the disused Carolusberg mine a few kilometers east of Springbok. However commercial mining was only started in , and over the next years vast quantities of ore have been extracted from 23 mines in the area. Springbok and its surrounding towns Nababeep and Okiep were the center of this mining activity.
