The winner was Horace Rawlins , a year-old Englishman, who had arrived in the U. McDermott became the first native-born American winner. American golfers soon began to win regularly and the tournament evolved to become one of the four majors. Since , the title has been won mostly by players from the United States. Since , players from only six countries other than the United States have won the championship, most notably South Africa , which has won five times since A streak of four consecutive non-American winners occurred from to for the first time since Open play is characterized by tight scoring at or around par by the leaders, with the winner usually emerging at around even par. Open course is seldom beaten severely, and there have been many over-par wins in part because par is usually set at 70, except for the very longest courses. An exemption category for the top 50 as of the tournament date was added for , apparently in response to the phenomenon of golfers entering the top 50 between the original cutoff date and the tournament such as Justin Rose and Rickie Fowler in These categories were eliminated in favor of inviting the top 60 on the OWGR at both relevant dates. Firstly there is Local Qualifying, which is played over 18 holes at more than courses around the United States. Many leading players are exempt from this first stage, and they join the successful local qualifiers at the Sectional Qualifying stage, which is played over 36 holes in one day at several sites in the U. There is no lower age limit and the youngest-ever qualifier was year-old Andy Zhang of China , who qualified in after Paul Casey withdrew days before the tournament. Open gives a golfer several privileges that make his career much more secure if he is not already one of the elite players of the sport. Open champions are automatically invited to play in the other three majors the Masters , The Open Championship British Open , and the PGA Championship for the next five years, as well as The Players Championship , and they are exempt from qualifying for the U.
