I instantly bought her fantastic Walk in Woods pattern. The pictures were great and I was really looking forward to crochet this pattern. I was so blown away that I did not even realize, that it was a knitting pattern. I am not a very good knitter so I decided to adapt the pattern and change it a little to a blanket. I contacted Maliha Design and they have been so kind to give me permission to write a crochet pattern. I always wanted to crochet a whole blanket with less colour but more structure, so this was the perfect opportunity to do so. I am in love with Scheepjes Cahlista since it has been launched. That was exactly what I wanted to achieve because this blanket is going to be a present for a friend of mine who is a passionate fisherman and he is soon going to be a daddy. The Mosaic technique gives the the blanket a very nice texture and structure which in my opinion is just perfect for a baby blanket. As a father of two I know, that Babies want to feel, touch and play with their blankets. Or maybe is it something special with my kids? Another advantage of using less colours is that you do not have to deal with tons of loose ends. The whole blanket actually has exactly 16 ends to sew in. The whole pattern combines two different mosaic charts. The pattern is not tested! If you find mistakes or have troubles understanding please do not hesitate to contact me. I found a little mistake in the pattern: In row 17 and 18 you ch2, skip 1 stitch as you always do and NOT ch1, skip 1 stitch. I changed that in the pattern now. As a few people asked: OLd Lace, Yarn B:

But both of these series were preceded by Alcoa Presents: One Step Beyond also distinguished itself by basing its stories on actual reported events. The show was created by Merwin Gerard, who had first worked with host and director John Newland on the drama anthology series Robert Montgomery Presents. Producer Collier Young was also part of the team who conceived the series and managed it through its 3-year run. Newland was an established TV actor and director and his role as the face of the series, the one personality that appeared each week introducing and summarizing each episode, was key in selling the series to ABC. Instead, it argued that its dramatizations were based in fact and that the core concept of these dramatizations telepathy, precognition, alien abduction, Bigfoot were valid and worthy of further study. The show made itself more believable by using a light touch, both in avoiding exaggerated claims of veracity and in staying away from what Newland called "phantasmagoric" content, unlike The Twilight Zone. The series also attempted to convince viewers by occasionally featuring the real-life subjects of its dramas at the end of episodes. The real Peter Hurkos is brought on camera at the end of his two-part story, "The Peter Hurkos Story, Part 2" April 26, , not to swear that the events depicted are true, but to say that he would continue to make himself available for any testing or analysis of his psychic abilities. And the real Margaret North is shown in her wheelchair at the end of "Tidalwave" August 30, and asked by Newland if she is a believer in psychic miracles after being saved from a Hawaiian tidal wave by a deaf man who "heard" her calls for help but did not hear the warning sirens blaring from loudspeakers as he drove across the island. Newland tells her he is a believer, too, making it clear that the goal of the series is to convert the viewing audience as well. In the aforementioned "Tidalwave," invalid Margaret North is rescued from an impending tidalwave by a man who hears her despite being unable to hear. In "Earthquake" January 12, , a hotel bellman has visions of the coming San Francisco earthquake and though he himself does not survive and most who hear his warnings think he is crazy, an elderly couple from Sicily heed his words and are saved when they relocate outside the city before the quake hits. In "Who Are You? In "The Trap" November 15, lifelong Chicago resident Dom DiNovio begins to experience the sensations of his unknown identical twin Fred Gibbs, who is trapped by a beam in an abandoned mine outside Reno. Though the overwhelming majority of episodes depict the paranormal intervening on the side of justice or beneficence, there are a few exceptions to this theme, such as the tale of alien abduction "Encounter" April 12, in which a mining company scout leaves behind a terror-filled last communication as he is approached by what is assumed to be an alien spacecraft, then vanishes and is found in the desert hundreds of miles beyond where he could have flown given the amount of fuel in his plane. The vanished scout tells the doctor who finds him that he had been kidnapped but dies of shock without saying where he had been for the 4 days he had gone missing. The doctor says that he had been in the desert only about 30 minutes before being found, leaving us to conclude that the scout had been abducted by aliens without offering us a reassuring alternative explanation. In "The Forests of the Night" January 19, three hunters play an ancient Chinese game to while away the hours during a rainstorm, only to have one of them apparently turn into a leopard and then get shot by another group of hunters. However, more often than not, paranormal intervention is a force for good and a reason to believe in its existence for those looking to be rescued. As Muir documents, Gerard once conceded in an interview that there are really only about 15 different paranormal stories, meaning that the series had repackaged its repertoire several times over just to make it through its three seasons. Despite this, the show was resurrected in with the original producers and writers, but Newland admitted that the quality was inferior, and it lasted only a single season. The theme and the scores for most episodes were composed by Harry Lubin. By the late s he had moved over to weekly radio programs, first for NBC, then the Advertisers Broadcasting Company. In the early s he progressed to television, first with The Pinky Lee Show, which remained on the air until He died July 21, at the age of The complete first season, all of whose episodes aired in , has been released by Paramount Studios. Many episodes for Seasons 2 and 3 have been released by different companies. Echo Bridge has also released a 4-disc collection containing 20 episodes. And Alpha Home Video has released 13 single discs each containing 4 episodes again scattered amongst the three seasons. There are also many episodes available for viewing on youtube. Using the Mill Creek DVD set and supplementing it with episodes found online, I was able to view 36 of the 38 episodes that aired in The video quality from all three of these sources Mill Creek, youtube, and hulu is fairly poor and the episodes are sometimes slightly truncated. The Actors John Newland Born in Cincinnati, Newland began his theatrical career in Chicago, where he performed with a vaudeville group called The Vikings who wore gold capes. After serving in the Army Air Force in World War II, he began his film career in but considered it a failure after landing only small parts and turned to television by the early s. He had particular success on drama anthology series, making multiple appearances on shows such as The Philco-Goodyear Television Playhouse, Kraft Theatre, and 37 appearances on Robert Montgomery Presents. His work was good enough to garner an Emmy nomination in It was while working on the latter series that he also moved to the other side of the camera and took up directing, helming 15 episodes of the anthology before going on to do double duty and acting on The Loretta Young Show. This experience served him well when he was recruited by One Step Beyond creator and friend Merwin Gerard to be both host and director for the series. But his directorial career flourished: He went on to direct multiple episodes of Thriller, Dr. He passed away January 10, at the age of Kildare plays bellman Gerald Perkins.
