A Cat in Paris , Fr. There were nine nominees for Best Picture, using a new nomination process, announced in June of 2010. It followed a very brief, two-year period in which the Best Picture field included 10 nominees, making the choices extremely inclusive. In the new nomination process, Academy members were asked to rank five films for Best Picture rather than 10, as in the last two years. The Weinstein Company had 16 nominations from 5 films and 8 wins; Paramount had 18 nominations from 6 films and 6 wins; Buena Vista had 12 nominations from 4 films and 2 wins; while Sony Pictures with 21 nominations from 8 films had only 3 wins. The two top films, with a combined 21 nominations and 10 Oscar wins, were both nostalgic odes to the history of film-making and the early bygone days of cinema, followed by a few other films also set in the past. The two top films were also competing against each other in seven categories. The lineup of Best Picture nominees with their wins in descending order , are found below: The Artist with 10 nominations and five major wins: The Patriot was the only silent film among the five nominees of its year, and the last silent film to receive a Best Picture nomination, over 80 years ago. The only times Allen has won the Original Screenplay Oscar has been when his films were also nominated for Best Picture. In addition, Allen was the oldest winner of the Best Original Screenplay award, at age 77. The films of all of the five nominees for Best Director were also nominated for Best Picture. All of the Best Director nominees were males unlike two years previously when Kathryn Bigelow won for the category , and all were veterans, except for 44 year-old Michel Hazanavicius, who won the Best Director Oscar for The Artist. It was his first nomination and win , and the first for a French director. The other four nominees were: The other nominees conspicuously without a Pixar nominee or winner were: A Cat in Paris Fr. The Best Actor category included two long-time favorite nominees Clooney and Pitt , but neither of them triumphed. The category was won by a first-time nominee - and the first French actor to ever win Best Actor - 39 year-old French actor Jean Dujardin with his first nomination and win for his performance in The Artist, as declining, handsome silent film star George Valentin struggling with the coming of talkies. The other four Best Actor nominees were: Two actresses in the category, Glenn Close and Meryl Streep have competed against each other in the Best Actress category twice before in 1991 and 1999, and on the two previous occasions both lost to Moonstruck and Cher, and to The Accused and Jodi Foster. This time in an upset, 62 year-old Meryl Streep won her third Oscar it was with her record-setting 17th Oscar nomination, five more than both second-place Katharine Hepburn and Jack Nicholson, and she already possessed 13 Best Actress nominations , for her performance in The Iron Lady with two nominations, and two wins including Best Makeup , a biopic by director Phyllida Lloyd, as former UK Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. The other Best Actress nominees were: With his win, Plummer became the oldest actor to win an Oscar. He also became the oldest person to win an Academy Award in one of the four acting categories. The other nominees in the category were: The other Best Supporting Actress nominees were: It has been rare in Academy history to have nominations for comedies, and especially female comedic roles. Edgar without nominations , as FBI head J. The picture received two nominations:
