"To my father, who showed me what path not to take" So reads the acknowledgment at the end of this book written by Juan Pablo Escobar, the son of renowned Colombian drug lord Pablo Escobar.

InSight Crime looks at the most intriguing tales. Escobar also filled his personal library " which he decorated with a human skull he had dug out of the graveyard " with Communist texts by Vladimir Lenin and Mao Tse-tung. Fake High School Diplomas Pablo Escobar made his debut in the world of crime by selling fake high school diplomas with his cousin Gustavo Gaviria. After providing dozens of people with falsified academic documents, Escobar and his cousin moved on to a variety of other criminal schemes like stealing cars, robbing movie theater ticket windows, and selling stolen tombstones. Not long afterwards, Henao gave birth to Juan Pablo at the age of Although Escobar was notoriously unfaithful, Henao stayed with him until his death in Cruel Jokes While living in the luxurious La Catedral prison, Pablo Escobar and his men planned cruel jokes to entertain themselves. The man who had planned the joke listened to the ensuing fight and only came clean later, when Roberto and his wife were close to ending their marriage. Jeans Soaked in Cocaine Pablo Escobar employed myriad different cocaine trafficking routes and methods, but one of his most ingenious techniques consisted of soaking jeans in liquid cocaine and legally exporting them to the United States. Upon receipt, the buyers would wash the jeans with a special liquid, extract the cocaine, and dry it. When the Drug Enforcement Administration DEA caught wind of the method " thanks to an informant " Escobar simply switched to soaking the boxes in which the jeans were packed in liquid cocaine. In total, Napoles had two helicopter landing pads, ten houses, three zoos, 1, employees, 27 artificial lakes, life-sized dinosaur statues, and its own gas station. Smuggled Exotic Animals In order to stock his zoos at Napoles, Pablo Escobar smuggled exotic animals into the country on his drug planes. By the time the authorities arrived, all they could find were crates covered in feathers and hair. Unperturbed, Escobar had his men buy twelve donkeys, paint them black and white, and bribe the security guard at the building where the animals were being held to switch them out. He used the same ploy to reclaim his confiscated exotic birds, using chickens, geese, and ducks. Pablo Escobar agreed to call Gilberto Rodriguez Orejuela " one of the Cali Cartel leaders " and ask him to send the man to Medellin so Pabon could get his revenge, but Rodriguez Orejuela refused. According to Juan Pablo Escobar, the autopsy report mentions three bullet wounds: Click here to send InSight Crime your comments. We encourage readers to copy and distribute our work for non-commercial purposes, provided that it is attributed to InSight Crime in the byline, with a link to the original at both the top and bottom of the article. Son of the leader of the Medellín cartel, Pablo Escobar, JUAN PABLO ESCOBAR is an architect, lecturer, drug policy reform advocate, and writer. He was a subject of the award-winning documentary Sins of My Father and lives in Argentina.

The Biography Pablo Escobar was one of the most successful businessmen of all time. He was a loving husband, a family man and a hero to the poor people of the Colombian city where his business was based. He was also a criminal mastermind, a murderer, a notorious Colombian drug lord, and the founder of the Medellín Cartel. Like any other serious businessman, Escobar had dreams and goals. He wanted to be the best at what he did and make his first huge bank deposit by the time he turned twenty-two. He wanted to make life easier for people who were suffering in poverty and powerlessness. Whatever else can be said of him, he did achieve all these goals. Unfortunately, the business he chose to pursue was smuggling. Besides the fact that cocaine destroyed the lives of many who used it, Escobar killed people directly or ordered their executions. By the time he died, he and his people had murdered thousands of people. He was born the son of humble parents, but Escobar eventually wielded enormous power over police officers, judges, politicians and more traditional business owners. Power like that can only come from someone with vision and determination. He had a keen sense of what was possible, and he reached prominence in the drug trade through his extraordinary energy and ingenuity. The most obvious question about Pablo Escobar is what he could have done if he had turned his talents only toward the positive. Yet, that question will forever remain unanswered. Just as he seemed destined to make a very large imprint on the world, he seemed born to cause destruction and death. Whether by destiny or choice, there can be no doubt that Pablo Escobar changed the world; and in most ways, for the worse. In the end, Escobar was still a violent criminal with enough ruthlessness and drive to damage, kill, and destroy many lives. The story of Pablo Escobar is a cautionary but fascinating tale. His brother, Roberto Escobar, denies this, instead claiming that the gravestones came from cemetery owners whose clients had stopped paying for site care, and that he had a relative who had a monuments business. Escobar studied at the University for a short period, but left without obtaining a degree. Illegal drug trade in Colombia, Illegal drug trade in Panama, and Illegal drug trade in the Bahamas International drug routes. Beginning in 1977, Pablo started developing his cocaine operation, flying out planes several times, mainly between Colombia and Panama, along smuggling routes into the United States. After many months of legal wrangling, he ordered the murder of the two arresting officers, and the case was later dropped. Roberto Escobar details this as the point where Pablo began his pattern of dealing with the authorities, by either bribery or murder. As there were no drug cartels then, and only a few drug barons, Pablo saw it as untapped territory he wished to make his own. Soon, the demand for cocaine was skyrocketing in the United States, and Escobar organized more smuggling shipments, routes, and distribution networks in South Florida, California, and other parts of the country. With the enormous profits generated by this route, Escobar was soon able to purchase 7. The luxury house he created contained a zoo, a lake, a sculpture garden, a private bullring, and other diversions for his family and the cartel. Roberto Escobar also claimed that, in addition to using planes, his brother employed two small submarines to transport the massive loads. The production process was also altered, with coca from Bolivia and Peru replacing the coca from Colombia, which was beginning to be seen as substandard quality than the coca from the neighboring countries. Palace of Justice siege Escobar was held directly responsible by various media publications for the storming of the Colombian Supreme Court. It is alleged that Escobar backed the storming of the Colombian Supreme Court by left-wing guerrillas from the 19th of April Movement, also known as M Escobar was listed as a part of Los Extraditables. Hostages were also taken for negotiation of their release, thus helping to prevent extradition of Los Extraditables to the U. He was a natural at public relations, and he worked to create goodwill among the poor of Colombia. Eventually, the government negotiated with Escobar and convinced him to surrender and cease all criminal activity in exchange for a reduced sentence and preferential treatment during his captivity. Declaring an end to a series of previous violent acts meant to pressure authorities and public opinion, Escobar surrendered to Colombian authorities in 1992. Before he gave himself up, the extradition of Colombian citizens to the United States had been prohibited by the newly approved Colombian Constitution of 1991. This act was controversial, as it was suspected that Escobar and other drug lords had influenced members of the Constituent Assembly in passing the law. Escobar was confined in what became his own luxurious private prison, La Catedral, which featured a football pitch, giant doll house, bar, jacuzzi and waterfall. They trained and advised a special Colombian police task force known as the Search Bloc, which had been created to locate Escobar. This coordination was allegedly conducted mainly through the sharing of intelligence to allow Los Pepes to bring down Escobar and his few remaining allies, but there are reports that some individual Search Bloc members directly participated in missions of Los Pepes death squads. The relationship was discouraged by the Henao family, who considered Escobar socially inferior; the pair eloped. In 1994, the journalist Virginia Vallejo published her memoir Amando a Pablo, odiando a Escobar Loving Pablo, Hating Escobar, in which she describes her romantic relationship with Escobar and the links of her lover with several presidents, Caribbean dictators, and high-profile politicians. The luxury house contained a colonial house, a sculpture park, and a complete zoo with animals from various continents, including elephants, exotic birds, giraffes, and hippopotamuses. Escobar had also planned to construct a Greek-style citadel near it, and though construction of the citadel was started, it was never finished. The four-bedroom estate, built in 1988 on Biscayne Bay, was seized by the government in the 1990s. Later, the dilapidated property was owned by Christian de Berdouare, proprietor of the Chicken Kitchen fast-food chain, who had bought it in 1995. De Berdouare would later hire a documentary film crew and professional treasure hunters to search the edifice before and after demolition, for anything related to Escobar or his cartel. They would find unusual holes in floors and walls, as well as a safe that was stolen from its hole in the marble flooring before it could be properly examined. The compound, now half-demolished and overtaken by vegetation and wild animals, featured a mansion, apartments, courtyards, a large swimming pool, a helicopter landing pad, reinforced windows, tiled floors, and a large, unfinished building to the side of the mansion. His death ended a month search effort, costing hundreds of millions of dollars. The two fugitives attempted to escape by running across the roofs of adjoining houses to reach a back street, but both were shot and killed by Colombian National Police. It has never been proven who actually fired the final shot into his ear, or determined whether this shot was made during the gunfight or as part of a possible execution, with wide speculation remaining regarding the subject. In a statement regarding the topic, the duo stated that Pablo "had committed suicide, he did not get killed. Some of them consider him a saint and pray to him for receiving divine help. The action was seen as too late. On August 31, Santofimio was sentenced to 24 years in prison for his role in the crime. The journalist stated that Escobar had financed the operation, which was committed by M ; but she blamed the army for the killings of more than people, including 11 Supreme Court magistrates, M members, and employees of the cafeteria. Members of the Cali Cartel even replayed their recordings of her conversations with Pablo for their wives to demonstrate how a woman should behave. Ultimately, authorities were unable to link her funds to illegal activity, and she was released. I fell in love with his desire to help people and his compassion for their hardship. We [would] drive to places where he dreamed of building schools for the poor. From [the] beginning, he was always a gentleman. The property has been converted into a theme park surrounded by four luxury hotels overlooking the zoo.
