No, I had not either, but as well being a London Assembly member town councillor to me and you , she is also co-leader of the Green Party, which tells you more about the quality of Green Party politicians than the ability of young Sian! She actually had the nerve to suggest that Britain was lagging behind the rest of the world when it came to climate change. Unsurprisingly Marr did not challenge on such a dishonest statement. There could of course be lots of reasons why neither the press nor the public appear to give a damn. They also know that countries like China and India are continuing to build new coal power stations. Most are sensible enough to realise that a slightly warmer climate in Britain has made little difference to their lives. People have no intention of giving up their modern lifestyles, as the IPCC demands. Above all, they have much more important things to worry about. There has been, however, one item in the news today about the IPCC report. Unsurprisingly Marr did not mention it, as it was written by Christopher Booker. Inevitably, last Monday, the BBC went into overdrive, leading its news bulletins with the story from morning till night. But most newspapers gave it only fairly perfunctory coverage, tucked away on an inside page. We must stop using virtually all the coal, oil and gas on which our modern industrial civilisation has been built. To appreciate the scale of what this would involve, we may recall that, according to the International Energy Agency, the world currently relies on fossil fuels for 81 per cent of all the energy it uses. But already the world has warmed by one degree of that amount since the 19th century, in the Modern Warming, which began when it emerged years ago from the Little Ice Age. Until now, the IPCC has recognised that much of this was due to natural causes. But now, without proper explanation, this is all blamed on human activity. So how does the IPCC justify its new mega-panic? But even the IPCC itself, in its last major report in , found that there had been no discernible increase in extreme weather events, such as hurricanes, floods and extreme heatwaves. As for the controversial subject of those rising sea levels, as the world-renowned atmospheric physicist Dr Richard Lindzen put it in a lecture in London last week: Back in the real world, much more relevant to how we should view this latest IPCC report, and exactly as they indicated they would do at Paris in , the leading CO2-emitting countries outside Europe, led by China and India, have continued to build fossil fuel power stations just as if Paris had never happened. However much those behind this report may delude themselves and try to delude the rest of us, the fact is that the rest of the world is no longer being taken in by their make-believe.
