His younger son Rodman, a Princeton graduate, lived in France early in his career and is credited with creating a demand for French luxury goods that persists to this day. Rodman was credited with the artistic emphasis that gave the Wanamaker stores their cachet and also was a patron of fine music, organizing spectacular organ and orchestra concerts in the Wanamaker Philadelphia and New York stores under music director Alexander Russell. Department store business[edit] Main article: Wanamaker Building[edit] A large story granite store in Philadelphia, known as the "Wanamaker Building", designed by famous Chicago architect Daniel H. Burnham. The new store, The Wanamaker Building, which still stands today, became a Philadelphia institution and has remained an integral part of the Philadelphia culture. Among other things of note, the Grand Court has been featured in major motion pictures, such as: Wanamaker bought the organ in and had transported from St. Louis aboard 13 freight cars. More than 8, pipes were added to the organ between and By , an additional 10, pipes were installed, bringing the total number of pipes today to 28. Once a year, usually in June, "Wanamaker Organ Day" is held, which is a free recital which lasts most of the day. Known as the "Wanamaker Eagle", it became a famous meeting place for Philadelphians. Yost designed the Holiday Light Show for the Grand Court, creating a more contemporary display than previous years. Since then the Holiday Light Show has become a beloved annual holiday tradition for generations of Philadelphians. Today, the light show has been modernized, but has retained the look and feel of the original show. Expansion outside Philadelphia[edit] Wanamaker expanded to New York City in , continuing a mercantile business originally started by Alexander Turney Stewart. Wanamaker was an innovator, creative in his work, a merchandising genius, and proponent of the power of advertising, though modest and with an enduring reputation for honesty. He gave his employees free medical care, education, recreational facilities, pensions and profit-sharing plans before such benefits were considered standard. That same year he was appointed United States Postmaster General by President Benjamin Harrison ; he was accused by the newspapers of the day of buying the post. He was the first to make plans for free rural postal service in the United States, although the plan was not implemented until In he commissioned a series of stamps that were derided in the national media as the poorest quality stamps ever issued, both for printing quality and materials. Then, when his department store ordered advance copies of the newly translated novel The Kreutzer Sonata by Leo Tolstoy , the deadline had been missed and only the regular discount was offered. He retaliated by banning the book from the US Mail on grounds of obscenity. This earned him ridicule in many major U. In he ordered changes in the uniforms of letter carriers, and was then accused of arranging for all the uniforms to be ordered from a single firm in Baltimore, to which he was believed to have financial ties. Philanthropy[edit] Wanamaker was known for his philanthropy in regards to the poor in Philadelphia. He co-founded Sunday Breakfast Rescue Mission , a homeless shelter and soup kitchen, in James the Less in Philadelphia. Barclay Warburton Patricia "Paddy" W. Estelle and Elizabeth Wanamaker McLeod, who all received substantial stocks, real estate and cash instruments. Second son Rodman was made sole inheritor of the store businesses. His first son Thomas B. Wanamaker died in Paris in A popular saying illustrating how difficult it was to qualify the response to advertising is attributed to Wanamaker: On May 8, , the U. One was his townhouse at Walnut Street, which was modeled similar to an English manor house and kept a Welte Philharmonic Organ. The facade of this building is still extant. Thomas Edison , a close friend, was a pallbearer at his funeral. The original mansion was designed by architect E. Sargent of New York; President Harrison visited there. A railroad station, Cheltenham Hills located below Jenkintown , and no longer in existence , was constructed in addition to his vast mansion. Woodie declared bankruptcy in the early s, and with it went the Wanamaker stores, which were sold to May Department Stores Company on June 21, Williamson died in , shortly after he founded the school. Wanamaker has been memorialized in many ways at the school, most conspicuously in The John Wanamaker Free School of Artisans, which encompasses the instructional trade workshops and is considered the heart of the college. A dormitory, foundations, and groups are also named in his honor. Wanamaker privately wrote a biography of Williamson titled, Life of Isaiah V. Williamson, which was published posthumously in 1885. The medal, also called "The Wanamaker Medal" is to be awarded to a person male or female who, being a non-Mason, supports the ideals and philosophy of the Masonic Fraternity. At the discretion of the R. Grand Master, the medal is awarded to one who personifies the high ideals of John Wanamaker—a public spirited citizen, a lover of all people, and devoted to doing good. The medal has been presented sparingly to maintain the great prestige associated with an award created by resolution of the Pennsylvania Grand Lodge.

to a whole, new life. Bridgeway Christian Church is a Scripture-soaked, Spirit-led community expectantly seeking transformation into our identity in Jesus.

Other cities have already done this. Just talking about policy philosophy Note: Kelly may not realize it; Murray surely must. Finance Department under Debbie Moreno does great job in revenue projections. Under Debbie Moreno, Anaheim has taken out huge balloon payment loans that Councils decades from now will curse. The money for the Convention Center expansion and ARC streetcar will not likely pay off despite his personal experience. Note that Pepper is the first one at the meeting to mention a gate tax “ which, if ever enacted, would likely be minimal. And no one is trying to drive away Disneyland; the question is what is reasonable taxation given city subsidies. Taxpayer Disenfranchisement Act Council often hostile to people voting: We get hotel tax, sales taxes, etc. Some of the above is either untrue or misleading. The question is whether it is so powerful that it not only shares less with the city than it should but that it may arguably take more from the City than it gives. Eventually, a gate tax “ likely far less than the 6. You may be surprised. A supermajority vote is also required for things like waiving bud requirements and sale of city-owned property. This Charter Amendment would not apply to citizen-sponsored initiative petitions. But it would apply to both General and Special tax measures that impose, extend, or increase any tax. Charter cities are exempted from that because we are governed by our City Charter, a city constitution, therefore we individually have to consider amending our own charter to make this kind of law take effect here in Anaheim. And none of them have done so before now, in the more than 12 years since the Supreme Court decision settling this matter. This is big, and apparently unprecedented, reining in of the substantially greater powers given to Charter Cities “ usually justified by the facts that they are larger, wealthier, and more complex. People discuss raising taxes. California is one of the highest-taxed states in the U. It has worked well. This is truly about conformity with General Law cities, and ensuring the ultimate taxpayer protections here in Anaheim. Lucille Kring spoke next. We shall quote from her verbatim. That was a vote. You thought we were making this up, right? Anaheim is not a General Law city. So this is not taking any taxing away or any vote away from the citizens of Anaheim. Emphasis added, of course. Someone please explain this to the Councilwoman. Occasionally runs for office to challenge some nasty incumbent who would otherwise run unopposed. Someday he might pick a fight with the intent to win rather than just dent someone. None of his pre-putsch writings ever spoke for the Democratic Party at the local, county, state, national, or galactic level, nor do they now. A family member co-owns a business offering campaign treasurer services to Democratic candidates and the odd independent. He is very proud of her. He does not always favor her clients, though she might hesitate to take one that he truly hated. He does advise some local campaigns informally and so far without compensation. If that last bit changes, he will declare the interest.

Lesson 8: Confusion, Part 2 by Stacia McKeever and Dan Lietha on January 18, "And He has made from one blood every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth".

Scout January 26, Comments On March 29, , The Godfather, considered by many to be one of the greatest films ever made, began principal photography in New York City. Because the film is a period piece, The Godfather actually presents a fascinating record of what s-era New York City locations still existed in the earlys. Sadly, many of them are now gone. The house today is pretty much the same as it appears in the film, except for one detailâ€¦ What happened to all the stone walls and the entrance gate? These were all fake, set up at the end of Longfellow Avenue to give the Corleone residence the feeling of a walled compound. This is what the same angle looks like today: Another shot from later in the film offers a better look at the layout: Still later, when Kay arrives at the house, we see a different angle including the guard booth. In reality, there are actually several houses at the end of the block that were cut off by the fake wall: As the wedding progresses, detectives show up to take license plate numbers. While the Renaissance Revival building is overall in good shape, some changes have been made over the years, including the removal of fire escapesâ€¦ and most egregiously, the complete gutting of the ground floor facade. The interior of Genco Oil was reportedly built on the fourth floor of a warehouse nearby to Mott Street but not actually in the Mietz building. Department Store on Fifth Avenue at 51st Street. Uneasy with the possible introduction of drugs into his business world, Don Corleone sends Luca Brasi to meet with Sollozzo and pledge his loyalty in order to spy on him. Brasi heads down a hotel hallwayâ€¦ shot in the rear entrance to the Hotel Edison on West 46th Street btw. Brasi is then murdered by Sollozzo in an upscale restaurantâ€¦but where was this shot? There has been a lot of debate over this. In fact, this pivotal scene was actually filmed in the Hotel St. What is unbelievable is that I cannot find a single damn picture of the establishment. In fact, about the only pictures you can find of the Hotel St. George, once the largest hotel in New York City, are postcard images taken in the s and 40s. George used to be teeming with theme venues The Stardust Room, The Bermuda Terrace , but who knows what was still around in when The Godfather was shot? If anyone has any leads, or has any memories of the space, please let me know! Today, a Chinese pharmacy: Just then, two assassins spring out and begin shooting, gunning down Corleone in front of the entrance to Genco at Mott: They exit the side entrance on West 50th Streetâ€¦ Then, Kay notices a headline on the newsstand announcing the Corleone shooting: The two run across the streetâ€¦ to a telephone booth, where Michael calls home. Meanwhile, Tom has been taken to an abandoned diner. I really wish I knew where this was, but it seems that any record of it is long gone. Anyone have any ideas? Not sure if the interior was actually abandoned, or if this was built on a stage: We see Clemenza leaving his houseâ€¦ and here it is today, located at East 5th Street on the edge of the Gravesend section in Brooklyn. We later get another shot of the house as Clemenza leaves to assist in the round of assassinations at the end of the film. Click below to go to the next page! Experiencing God in Times of Confusion, Part 2 Scripture: Psalm 90 If your world is full of chaos and confusion, you'll want to join Chip as he asks some diagnostic questions, straight from God's Word, that will help you move from chaos to clarity and begin to experience God's highest and best for you life.

My experiments in confusion - Part The Omnipotent Rothschilds Continuing from Part Let me highlight the socio-political conundrum identified in part-1 , quoting myself since no one else ever quotes a confused person: Perhaps there is some happy halfway compromise to fully independent thinking which will also help me gain friends and influence people? I believe it is a miracle that I still dabble in it every now and then. Entirely coincidentally of course, BIS is located in the same secretive banking capital where Theodor Herzl had earlier made his notorious Jewish manifesto, Der Judenstaat public in the First World Zionist Congress in to set the public stage for the creation of the exclusively Jewish state of Israel in Also entirely coincidentally, the British Empire had gratuitously issued its famous Balfour Declaration in the name of Lord Rothschild, the principal owner and founder of the international financial system who had controlled the Bank of England since Waterloo. These remarkable coincidences have today made the Rothschilds the most revered family name in Israel. Edward Griffin, Antony Sutton et. Even the brave president of Iran, Dr Ahmadinijad, and the brave president of Venezuela, Chavez, courageously challenging the status quo of the world anytime they acquire a microphone in their hands have not dared to mention that name. The Palestine freedom zealots in the West can boldly investigate and indict the dispensable Israeli leaders who come and go every election, but not its founder who evidently goes on forever? We have had years or so of family involvement in the finance business, There is no debate that Rothschild is a Jewish family, For a family business to survive, every generation needs a leader, Then somebody has to keep the peace. Building a global firm before globalisation meant a mindset of sharing risk and responsibility. If you look at the DNA of our family, that is perhaps an element that runs through our history. A long staple of Rothschild biographers, the founding directives are even vicariously depicted by Hollywood in the film which was intended to be an ode to the Rothschild name. Watch this short clip of the movie The House of Rothschild, about half way through in that clip, the historical depiction from the mouth of great-grandfather Amschel Rothschild, is empirically being fulfilled today, years later, as glibly confirmed even in that watered-down admission from his own great-grandson, David de Rothschild! This may have had something to do with the fact that the tour kicked off in Saudi Arabia. Although his office denies that he was part of the official party, it is probably no coincidence that he happened to be in the same part of the world at the right time. That is how the Rothschilds have worked for centuries: Record results from both its advisory and private banking operations enabled the bank to pay the bonuses to its 2, people in June. Most investment banks pay out bonuses between January and May. Goldman Sachs is due to tell its staff the size of their payouts in the next three weeks. Alongside its pro-forma group-wide results, Rothschild unveiled a joint venture with Rabobank of the Netherlands, whereby the two sides will pool their staff and clients in the food and agriculture sector. As part of the deal, Rabobank is buying a 7. Rabobank becomes the second biggest investor outside the family after the trading group Jardine Matheson, which owns 20 per cent. It is the second joint venture with a Dutch bank. No price was put on the deal. When you think about it, there are really only two theories of history. Either things happen by accident neither planned nor caused by anybody, or they happen because they are planned and somebody causes them to happen. In reality, it is the "accidental theory of history" preached in the unhallowed Halls of Ivy which should be ridiculed. Otherwise, why does every recent administration make the same mistakes as the previous ones? Why do they repeat the errors of the past which produce inflation, depressions and war? Why does our State Department "stumble" from one Communist-aiding "blunder" to another? If you believe it is all an accident or the result of mysterious and unexplainable tides of history, you will be regarded as an "intellectual" who understands that we live in a complex world. If you believe that something like 32, consecutive coincidences over the past forty years stretches the law of averages a bit, you are a kook! So, while searching for a way out of these absurd confusions rapidly piling up, I found this really bizarre interview asking similar questions for the first time in modern times, about the House of Rothschild, and I transcribed it: Please see what you make of such attempts at independent thinking. Also please feel free to advise me how one ought to go about this independent thinking business, the much wanted contribution of Western civilization to modern man, or so they say, without stepping on censor toes â€” never mind without losing friends. Even this last thought is causing me a great deal of confusion. But first, here is the interview.

I assume the building shell has been knocked down with a back-hoe, possibly exposing a layer of ashes from the Great Indiantown Fire of No matter, because the City of Saint John has promised to lay down sod to freshen the empty lot.

And in the s, many of those planes carried residents from Suriname, a small nation on the northern coast of South America. Suriname on the north coast of South America Suriname, and a handful of islands in the Caribbean, had been Dutch colonies since the s, serving as a lucrative source of revenue from slave labor. Dutch Surinamese arriving in the Netherlands in In the s, people from Suriname and the Dutch Caribbean , gained the right to join their fellow citizens in Europe, an option many chose to exercise in the s. Spurred in part by fears that the Surinamese independence movement would cause a possible loss of citizenship, more than , people left for the Netherlands in the years surrounding independence in This large migration was a shock to the government of the Netherlands, which now faced a major housing crisis. With places to live in Amsterdam scarce, the apartment structures of the Bijlmer, with their many vacancies, became an attractive alternative. But some of the housing associations managing buildings in the Bijlmer had quotas in place that limited the number of Surinamese Dutch they would take as tenants. So residents like Just Maatrijk and Guilly Koster decided the only solution was to squat. Koster describes their tactics: And from that moment, the Dutch government had to go through a civil process to get you out. Woman in the Netherlands wearing Surinamese flag to celebrate independence This was not a welcome change to all of the white Dutch people living in the Bijlmer. Koster points out that it was a failed experiment before the newcomers showed up, hence the vacancies. Over time, thousands of gay people moved there, and immigrants from places like Turkey, Morocco and Ghana who came to the Netherlands for work. In the late s some them were still working on the project, including the lead architect Siegfried Nassuth. Partly because of his disappointment, in , Nassuth abruptly quit his job at the Bijlmermeer. The visionary behind the Bijlmermeer had given up on it, but the story was far from over. In , the metro train connecting the Bijlmer to the rest of Amsterdam finally arrived, and a shopping center opened up nearby. Elevators were constantly broken. There was vandalism, and most devastating of all, heroin. In , the burglary rate in the Bijlmermeer was two and half times that of Amsterdam and almost ten times the rest of the Netherlands. Over half of the Bijlmer residents were victims of crime in Finally, the government decided they had to do something drastic, feeling the time had come to demolish some of the buildings. But before they could start, something horrible happened. From an altitude of about feet, Flight nose-dived into an apartment building at the Bijlmermeer. The official record says that 43 people died, including the three crew members on the plane. But the actual number was most likely higher since there were many undocumented people in the building. Even before the plane crash, the government had planned to demolish some of the large high-rise apartment buildings. But the crash provided an extra imperative. The whole country was suddenly focused on the Bijlmer and its struggles. Over the next 15 years, the city removed several of the high-rise apartment buildings, one after another as the residents were relocated. Instead, they were taken apart story by story to avoid creating the impression of a neighborhood being blown up and forsaken. Eventually, many of the high-rises were replaced with smaller buildings, between one and five stories. Shops were relocated to be closer to the housing, and parking garages were torn down because no one was using them. Elevateds road were eliminated, putting cars and drivers back to ground level. Accommodations for bicycles were provided. The goal now was to mix functions instead of separating them. Article Machines for Living In: Almost immediately after the Bijlmermeer was finished, another neighborhood in Amsterdam was redesigned " it was done with bricks, a traditional Dutch material. The Bijlmermeer, and maybe a lot of Modernism, was architecture for architects. It was a top-down, paternalistic approach to city planning. The redesign of the Bijlmermeer did not make that mistake. People from the community were heavily involved in the redesign process. And, in addition to changes in the physical environment, job training programs and special housing for heroin addicts were created. The Bijlmer is one of the most diverse areas in the The Netherlands, with over nationalities represented, including still a lot of Surinamese Dutch.

Five million of our people face hunger. More than million people are living in poverty in Nigeria. Over million lack adequate sanitation. Underemployment is also close to 20 per cent. We need to understand these statistics for us to realise why we need to talk about nation building, inclusion and prosperity. This is behind developed nations, but it is also behind some of our African peers. According to the World Bank, only In other words, millions of our people are excluded from the formal banking and financial systems. To build a virile nation, we must pursue financial inclusion aggressively. What really is inclusion? According to the World Bank framework for inclusion, Social Inclusion is the process of improving the terms for individuals and groups to take part in society. It is also the process of improving the ability, opportunity, and dignity of people, disadvantaged on the basis of their identity, to take part in society. Individuals and groups want to be included in three interrelated domains: Intervening in one domain without consideration of the others is likely to be one of the most important reasons for the limited success of inclusion policies and programs. I can use Lagos as a good example of a society practicing social inclusion because Lagos is a classical example of a cosmopolitan city that has imbibed every other person to succeed in anything that they try to do. MARKETS In their day-to-day interactions, people engage in society through four major marketsâ€”land, housing, labor, and creditâ€”all of which intersect at the individual and the household level. Health and education services enhance human capital. Social protection services cushion vulnerable groups against the effects of shocks and promote their well-being. SPACES Physical spaces have a social, political, and cultural character that solidifies systems and processes of exclusion. So we must ensure that we do not exclude people or groups from building a great nation. Social inclusion matters for itself. But it also matters because it is the foundation for shared prosperity and because social exclusion is simply too costly. There are substantial costsâ€”social, political, and economicâ€”to not addressing the exclusion of entire groups of people. A sustainable path towards ending extreme poverty and promoting shared prosperity also involves creating an inclusive society, not only in terms of economic welfare but also in terms of the voice and empowerment of all groups. We must begin to realise that every strata of the society counts, we must listen and accommodate all views, whether they are poor, whether they are Igbos, Hausas, whether they are rich, Muslims or Christians, we must put everything in a basket for us to be able to build the nation correctly. An inclusive society must have those institutions, structures and processes that empower local communities, professional associations, artisans, CDAs so they can hold government accountable. It also requires the participation of all groups in society, including traditionally marginalized groups, such as ethnic minorities and indigenous populations, in decision-making processes. Thankfully, the Nigerian economy has turned a corner and we continue to see positive indices of economic recovery and an encouraging outlook for the future. However, economists have stated quite strongly that for Nigeria to attain its potential, we need the economy to grow by per cent a year because the population growth is almost 3 per cent. This is critical if we are going to move the needle in reducing poverty, preventing social unrest and unlocking the full potential of this country. To meet our growth ambitions we need jobs and we need to increase productivity too. Nigeria has the advantage of a large population, but the majority are under-skilled. It is imperative to equip workers with the skills needed to keep pace with an economy in transition like Nigeria. Improvements in productivity will require investments to ensure a broad availability of good quality education as well as relevant vocational training to improve value-added activity across key sectors such as manufacturing and services. We need to close that gap in economic and political power between women and men. Providing both girls and boys with education is a first step. Quality education is the basis for jobs and income. A modern, competitive economy needs the best heads and hands, regardless of gender. This is sound economics and simple common sense. Government need to implement structural reforms to enhance efficiency, making valuable long-term investments in technology and science to support research and development. In addition, governments also need to support the economy to provide jobs for their fast-growing young populations. They should also encourage businesses to provide lifetime training to workers, ensuring they continue to have relevant and valuable skills to support employment as they age. Professional services firm, PwC in its World in posited that governments of emerging markets should follow a two-pronged approach: First, they should continue to develop strong institutions, and macroeconomic fundamentals. Second, they should continue to invest in infrastructure, to aid the development of other industries, and education, to develop a broadly skilled and flexible workforce. I believe these suggestions are apt for our circumstance. While digital revolution is affecting financial services, we need to decide together what type of financial system will really impact employment and bring more people into the formal financial system. We must also continue to fight corruption. This has been our primary focus in the last three and half years. Bringing our communities together to ensure the future prosperity of Lagos State is non-negotiable. Let me share just a few statistics to show you just how important Lagos is to the success of Nigeria.
