1: What is PEGA? | PEGA Interview Questions and Answers pdf for Freshers Experienced

With Pega's collection of training courses your team can quickly acquire the expertise they need. All of our courses, both online and instructor-led, cover the same topics and product knowledge so you can choose which delivery format works best for you.

But what does that mean? As you may know, Pega has Direct Capture of Objectives DCO , a useful set of tools which can be used by experienced requirements analysts during the Inception and Elaboration phases of a Pega development to directly capture information about the business need. The certification means that I have a degree of competence in using those tools. Business problems first need business solutions. Some of those business solutions require automation and from there you go to technology solutions. Why Batman and Robin? See the comments below. Getting your Pega BA certification is an achievement, particularly for those of you who have done so on the back of a training course alone, but I think those of you without any actual analysis experience could probably do with some context setting. However, in my mind there is a dividing line between producing the To Be Business Architecture and doing requirements analysis. The bridge between the two should be a business case to justify a specific software development project and an initial product backlog, which should then be used to help choose the solution technology e. While junior and senior BAs may contribute to the Business Architecture, it should be led and presented by a Business Architect, that is someone who, using an architectural framework, knows how to tie together the various models produced by the analysts into an overall model that represents how the enterprise operates or should be operating. The Pega certification does even scratch the surface of what that entails. It only means that you have passed an exam that relates to how Pega wants you to capture requirements into its tool. Of course, I am in no way diminishing the Pega business architect certification as a useful qualification for experienced business analysts who will be working on Pega projects. I would even encourage them to get some hands-on experience doing Pega development; analysts become better analysts if they understand the design constraints, after all. Pegasystems recommends and I concur that you have the following under your belt before you take their exam: A practical approach to recognising and improving competencies in your business analysts from the British Computer Society. An article on the different levels of business analyst. By the measures set in that article, I would rate myself as a Senior Business Analyst and not an Enterprise Business Analyst, largely because I lack sufficient in-depth knowledge of any one industry. Note that I have been a business analyst since , although years alone do not a senior make.
