My, my, Mr. Masterson. We did get a little overenthusiastic in our imagination there, didn't we. In fact we had to come up with just oodles of coincidences to keep the plot lumbering along. Didn't we. In fact having a psychotic father steal his son from his separated wife just wasn't enough. Did he.

Assemble your group in front of you, perhaps in a circle. Allow for two or more people to predict who was eliminated. As each person makes an attempt to uncover the key, congratulate those who get it, and encourage those who do not. Continue to offer more and more obvious clues until everyone has identified the key. Be sure to review the Leadership Tips described below to present this exercise thoughtfully. Therefore, only use one or two at a time, and always ensure that you solve the puzzle within a short time frame. If you cannot distinguish who exactly spoke first because two people spoke at the same time, or the background noise made it difficult, explain that two people were shot, or that it was a near-miss and you need to shoot again. Whatever your response, keep in character. Please note, the point of lateral-thinking types of activities should not be to frustrate your group beyond enjoyment. To this end, note my comments below. Be very careful in your language. Note two important factors in the presentation I describe above: This exercise has nothing to do with who I point to. Rather, it seeks to sharpen listening skills and heighten awareness of subtlety. Sit with your legs crossed or uncrossed, making sure that your right or left foot is pointing to a particular individual ie the dead person. So for each round, you adjust your sitting foot position, say the magic words, and then sift through the various guesses until the deceased is identified correctly. Or, only eliminating those people who are wearing a black garment of clothing, etc. How fast did you work out what was going on? Was there a positive outcome? What might this exercise teach us about diversity and inclusion? Have you played this activity? What type of group? Do you have useful advice for other users? Do you know a fun variation? 2: Fun Lateral-Thinking Exercise 'Bang You're Dead' Makes Groups Laugh

Whether you're an actor or an expert prank-player, the skill of playing dead is a good one to have. Learning how to play dead can be useful when you're acting in movies, television, or theater, and can also come in handy when you're scheming about intense new pranks to play. Create a death plan. If.

Mastrosimone hopes to reach out to potential killers in the thousands of audiences that the play continues to gather. The names of the cities in which these shootings took place are echoed multiple times within the script. The tragedy most significant to the play was the shooting at Thurston High School. The play, based strongly on the events that surrounded this particular school shooting, premiered at Thurston. It was performed by Thurston students, some of whom had been wounded in the shooting by Kip Kinkel. Some locals, including Dennis Murphy, the fire chief of Springfield at the time, were hostile towards the production at first. The play takes place in his jail cell after he has murdered his parents and five of his classmates. Beneath his arrogant facade, he is deeply insecure and frightened. He is a strong, sensible presence and does not back down in the face of a challenge. When Josh pushes him out of his anger over Michael tearing his picture of his first buck, he begins to fight back. Jessie—Jessie was friends with Emily and therefore, knew Josh. She is a "girly girl" who spends a lot of her afterlife thinking about how she will never be able to raise a family of her own. Possibly symbolic of the masculine pressure placed on Josh to "fit in" in the way his grandfather and others expect him to. Actor 2—Actor 2 plays the judge in the court scene and the prisoner who threatens Josh. Actor 4—Actor 4 plays the prosecutor and the psychotherapist Josh is forced to see. They also are the rumors in school and the voices in the dark that haunt Josh. The ghosts of those classmates demand to know why he killed them. Flashing back, Josh tries to manipulate his parents into buying the gun, his manipulation showing as his parents exit arguing. Josh tries to shrug off this torment, but the ghosts seize Josh and push him into his coffin. Josh flashes back to a hunting trip, narrated by the ghosts. Josh sees a buck, but he cannot kill it. So you make your face a mask. A mask that hides your face. A face that hides the pain. A pain that eats your heart. A heart nobody knows. Josh kills the buck, but is tormented by what he has just done. He hides his tears and brags about it the next day at school. Josh is called to the school office and is accused of writing threatening words on a blackboard. Josh contemplates suicide as voices in the dark taunt him, overwhelming him. The scene changes to the school cafeteria, and the ghosts once again ask him why he killed them, smearing ketchup where their gunshot wounds were. They then ignore Josh, speaking of what they miss and what they will never do. I thought I could just hit the reset button and start over. When I killed you I killed all my possibilities, too. Is this the rest of my life? Josh goes to his knees, devastated Oh God. It supports the school violence charity Ribbon of Promise. Even though this was written before the Columbine massacre, it is one of the massacres foreshadowed in this play. WGBH educational foundation, Rage Then Tears for a Troubled Teenager.
