Poke The Box Summary The world is moving too fast to sit in place and go through live being told what to do or waiting for permission. You need to start taking initiative if you want to accomplish anything meaningful. Your job is to bring life to something small and grow from there. Continual innovation is the only way to thrive in this fast-paced world. The first rule of doing work that matters is to set a schedule that your brain has to follow and then show up to work hard. Society rewards not the people who follow maps, but the ones who draw maps. Be a map drawer. Most businesses experience the highest growth in the first five years and then it slows down. Because they stop trying new ideas and start looking at efficiency and hiring over market disruption. The worst thing you can do is to try to fit in and limit your creative output to the world. Mini Summary What you accomplish comes down to what you take the initiative to start and finish. The opportunity, challenge, and thrill comes from focusing on the work, not focusing on the fear that the work brings you. Failure is a good thing. Because after each failure you learn a lesson and get better. True innovation is founded on failure. Not going all the way, and not starting. No one can give you the life, excitement, and joy you want by giving you a list of rules to follow. So ask yourself this: What box are you going to poke? What project are you going to start—no matter if it looks extremely profitable or just interesting? Odds are you already know the exact idea that you want to start. Take action to finish it. Order Poke The Box.
