In the past, two Christian names were given to a child so that he or she had two patron saints instead of just one. At confirmation , people usually adopt yet another second or third Christian name, however, it is never used outside church documents. In Eastern Poland, as in many other Catholic countries, people celebrate name days imieniny on the day of their patron saint. On the other hand, in Western Poland, birthdays are more popular. Name days, on the other hand, are often celebrated together with co-workers and other less-intimate friends. Information about whose name is associated with a given day can be found in most Polish calendars and on the internet. The choice of a given name is largely influenced by fashion. Many parents name their child after a national hero or heroine, or a character from a book, film, or TV show. In spite of this, a great number of popular names have been in use since the Middle Ages. In the 19th century, a wave of seemingly noble sounding surnames began to appear among the common population , where a significant number of the bourgeoisie class, and even the peasantry , began to adopt or bear the noble -ski suffix. In most cases, this practice is now considered archaic or rustic. Eventually, members of one clan would split into separate families with different surnames, usually derived from the name of their holdings or estates. Sometimes the family name and the clan name associated with the arms would be used together and form a double-barrelled name. Then, by analogy with German surnames associated with noble provenance using von , the equivalent Polish preposition is, z , which means "from" followed by the name of the patrimony or estate. Unrelated families who have joined the nobility by heraldic adoption can share the same coat of arms, even though that coat of arms bears the surname of the family who created it. Thus the total number of coats of arms in this system was relatively low â€" about in the late Middle Ages. From the 15th to the 17th century, the formula seems to copy the ancient Roman naming convention with the classic tria nomina used by the Patricians: Later, the double-barrelled name would be joined with a hyphen:
