Setting out Northward from Dromcolliher we follow for a time the unusually straight road that leads towards Newcastlewest. Passing through the small village of Feohanagh, four miles on, and continuing for another four miles before taking the road to the right, into Castlemahon, a place also known as Mahoonagh. Michael Scanlon who was born in emigrated to America with other members of his family in , became deeply involved in the Fenian Movement in the States. He was a prolific-song writer and was also known as the Poet Laureate of Fenianism. One of his early songs tells of his leaving Castlemahon: Aghish at this time consisted of 13 arable acres which was owned by Monks, who built their monastery there. The Old Church was seen there now was erected by It was during that the "Fine Plaque" Eaglais na Manach was erected to commemorate the Old Church of the Monks", that was in the Sacred place during the 16th and 17th Century. The Old church which it replaced was built over a hundred years ago. The Foundation must have been faulty as in Canon Irwins time, the pins were inserted to keep the walls Straight. One in each transept Canon Irwin died in Experts who examined the building considered that it was unlikely that it would hold up any more than a few years and they ordered that the transept galleries should be closed and the gallery should be supported by additional props. During the reign of Queen Elizabeth, persecution of the Catholics continued unchecked and rampant. In the queens fleet reached the coast of Ireland and made no delay in perpetuating several revolting atrocities up and down the country. In the Church on the site of the school was described as a modern building. According to tradition a thatched building existed in the same site. Early in the 13th Century it was called Maccaveni while old records dated shows Moycarenagh. In the Civil Survey of the spelling is Mahownagh, Mahoonagh or Castlemahon as we know it, is the parish in the Glenquin Division of the barony of Upper Connello. It is situated two miles southeast from NewcastleWest. It comprises 12, acres which are in part very good, being chiefly pasture and meadow. The ruins of a massive square tower about 30 feet high, exist neat Castlemahon and gives the name to the village. Near it is a curious circular building, with a high conical roof of stone. It was a strong fortress erected about by the Fitzgeralds. At Ballynoe are the remains of an old Castle built by the Knights Templers. The ivy clad ruins of Clonelty Church can still be traced beside the old castle. The Living was a rectory and vicarage of the diocese of Limerick and in the patronage of the Earl of Devon. The Castle Mahoonagh Castle was built by the Fitzgeralds at the end of the 12 or the beginning of the 13th Century. In later years the Castle was owned by the Fitzgibbons. The English occupied it but in another Fitzgibbon descendant of those who once owned the castle - attacked it and gained possession of it. There is an interesting story of how this Thomas Fitzgibbon-Macgibbon succeeded in taking over the Castle. He had a servant named Casey. Nobody Knows how Casey came to be in the Castle with the English, but on Shrove Tuesday morning he rose early, he Climbed to the top of the tower unobserved by the inmates and whistled. This was a signal to Fitzgibbon and the Irish to get ready. He came down, roused up the porter, Thomas Everard and conned him into letting him out. Escott, who held the castle, Vosias Walker, Daniel Jennings the Local minister, and others to the number of forty, were it is alleged, stripped naked by MacGibbon. Four of them were hanged at the Windmill of Meane near Kilbolane castle while the rest were allowed to retire in safety. The other prisoners were ordered to march to North Cork. As there were more captives than the Irish, Fitzgibbon decided to leave some of them to be hanged along the way. The English got angry at this and Fitzgibbon was forced to set all the prisoners free. After the amalgamation of the milk business of the co-operative with Golden Vale in the early ,s the poultry business continued as a separate Co-operative and embarked on an ambitious growth programme through business acquisitions. The Castlemahon processing plant was in a position to produce a product which would compare more than favourably with the best in Ireland. Employment has now increased in excess of This compares more than favourably with the employment level of in October The workforce at Castlemahon has proved to be highly flexible as is required in the fresh food business. As the range of product produced grows, the skill base of the company will be expanded to cater for market requirements. The market for chicken has changed considerably over the past few years. The present day house-wife tends to purchase a variety of products, thus making meal preparations less of a chore than hitherto. The significant change in the market is the greater demand for fresh turkey. In order to satisfy this demand a new processing line has been installed in Castlemahon and the first turkey in four years will be processed at the plant this Christmas. He suffered from blindness as a child and his brother brought him to the well. Up to this time the child's name was Richard and in thanksgiving his mother called him Richard Baptist from then on. It is told St Patrick passed this way fifteen hundred years ago and for the first time told the story of St John the Baptist and dedicated the well to his memory. In olden times rounds were paid there and one parishioner is known to have been cured at the well. Legend tells us when a woman washed clothes at the well it moved. The White Well was taken over by the County Council in 1901. It can supply a half million gallons per day. The well is supplying the parish with water as well as, some of the surrounding county districts.

Background[ edit ] Sarsfield was born in Lucan c. His family were a mix of Norman Irish and Irish Gaels. His father had been implicated in the Rebellion, supported the Irish Confederacy during the subsequent war , and assisted the Anglo-Irish Royalist forces against the English Republicans during the Siege of Dublin. Following the Cromwellian conquest of Ireland Patrick Sarsfield senior had his Leinster estates confiscated, and was transplanted to Connacht where he was given a smaller estate. Some sources suggest that his son Patrick was born while the family was in the west of Ireland. Following the Restoration of Charles II in , the Sarsfields made attempts to recover their lost estates but the Court of Claims found them guilty of taking part in the initial rebellion. The King now intervened on behalf of the Sarsfields, and agreed to a compromise: Lucan Manor would be restored to the Sarsfield family after the death of its current occupant, Colonel Theophilus Jones. Following the death of his nephew Charles Sarsfield, Patrick advanced his own claim to Lucan Manor with the legal assistance of his cousin Francis Sarsfield. Early military career[ edit ] Patrick, as a younger son, sought a career as a soldier. His first experience may have been some brief time spent with the Irish Guards in Dublin. Although Catholics were notionally forbidden from military service, the ranks of the Guards were frequently an exception. In May he helped his friend Captain Robert Clifford to abduct Ann Siderlin, a wealthy widow, and was considered lucky not to be prosecuted. Then he abducted Elizabeth Herbert, the widowed daughter of Lord Chandos , on his own account. Elizabeth refused to marry him, but agreed not to prosecute him in exchange for her freedom. The accession of James II led to his return home. After Monmouth had landed in the West Country and proclaimed himself King in defiance of James, Sarsfield was given permission to accompany the Royal Army as a gentleman volunteer. He was wounded with a sword slash to the hand during a skirmish with the rebels at Keynsham. During the fighting he was knocked off his horse, clubbed by muskets and left for dead by the rebel infantry. Wounded in several places, he nonetheless survived, and the battle gained him recognition for his conduct. His actions were even brought to the attention of the King. However before he could take up this position he was transferred to an English cavalry regiment and promoted to Major. King James had remodelled the Irish army from a Protestant -led force to a Catholic -led one, and Sarsfield, whose family was Roman Catholic , [1] was selected to assist in this reorganisation. Sarsfield sat in the Patriot Parliament as a member for Dublin County. William had been invited to invade England by a group of influential political and religious leaders in what became known in England as the " Glorious Revolution ", in Most Irish people supported James because of his Declaration of Indulgence or, as it is also known, the Declaration for the Liberty of Conscience, which granted religious freedom to all denominations in England and Scotland. James had promised the Irish Parliament an eventual right to self-determination. They feared for their lives and their property and rallied around James and his promises of tolerance for all religions. Sarsfield came with King James in command of the Irish soldiers James brought. The Irish army was largely composed of recruits, little drilled and badly armed. At the Boyne and also during the Siege of Limerick in August and September , Sarsfield became prominent as a leader. It certainly made him the popular hero of the war. His generosity and courage had already commended Sarsfield to the affection of his people. The Treaty Stone of Limerick. King James is said to have described him as a brave fellow who had no head, unlike himself since at the first intimation of defeat, James fled and was the very first to reach Dublin, 50 kilometres away. That year James created him Earl of Lucan , [11] and promoted him to the rank of brigadier and then to major-general. He fought with distinction in Flanders until he was mortally wounded at the Battle of Landen on 19 August , less than two years later. A plaque on the wall of this church marks the approximate location of his grave. Patrick Sarsfield is sometimes said to be the father of Catalina Sarsfield , the wife of German adventurer Theodor von Neuhoff , who briefly ruled as King of Corsica. She was in fact the daughter of David Sarsfield , a distant cousin of Patrick from the Cork branch of the family. A figure of Patrick Sarsfield is on the coat of arms of County Limerick. One of the three main road bridges in Limerick is named Sarsfield Bridge; it adjoins Sarsfield Street. Sarsfield Barracks is the army barracks of Limerick. Sarsfield Rock, which overlooks the site of the attack, is marked by a plaque commemorating his victory. Sarsfield House, a large office block in Limerick, is the office of the Revenue Commissioners.
