Picture postcards allowed and encouraged many individuals to send images across national borders, and the legal availability of a postcard image in one country did not guarantee that the card would be considered "proper" in the destination country, or in the intermediate countries that the card would have to pass through. Some countries refused to handle postcards containing sexual references such as of seaside scenes or images of full or partial nudity including images of classical statuary or paintings. Many French postcards featured naked women in erotic poses. These were described as postcards but whose primary purpose was not for sending by post because they would have been banned from delivery. Street dealers, tobacco shops, and a variety of other vendors bought the photographs for resale to tourists. The sale of erotica was banned, and many of these postcards were sold "under the counter". Each issue contained 75 nude images which could be ordered by mail, in the form of postcards, hand-tinted or sepia toned. Early 20th century[edit] Portrait by Bellocq , c. The Ur-Leica was a compact camera based on the idea of reducing the format of negatives and enlarging them later, after they had been exposed. This small, portable device made nude photography in secluded parks and other semi-public places easier, and represented a great advance for amateur erotica. Artists were enamored with their new ability to take impromptu photos without carrying around a clunky apparatus. Early 20th century artist E. Bellocq , who made his best known images with the older style glass plate negatives, is best remembered for his down-to-earth pictures of prostitutes in domestic settings in the Storyville red light district of New Orleans. David Steinberg speculates that the prostitutes may have felt at ease with Bellocq because he was "so much of a fellow outcast. Julian Mandel possibly a pseudonym became known in the s and s for his exceptional photographs of the female form. Participating in the German "new age outdoor movement," Mandel took numerous pictures in natural settings, publishing them through the Paris-based studios of Alfred Noyer and P-C Paris, [14] Les Studios and the Neue Photographische Gesellschaft. The models often are found in highly arranged classical poses, photographed both in-studio and outdoors. The images are composed artfully, with exquisite tones and soft use of lightingâ€”showing a particular texture created by light rather than shadow. Many photographs from this era were intentionally damaged. Bellocq, for instance, frequently scratched out the faces of his sitters to obscure their identities. Some of his other sitters were photographed wearing masks. The image is now considered one of the major pre-war photographs of the 20th century. Unlike earlier erotic photographs, whose subjects were usually anonymous, a number of well-known film stars posed for pin-up photographs and they were promoted as sex symbols. The emphasis was initially on bare legs, short skirts or swim suits and shapely figures; but in the s such photos started to show naked breasts. Erotic photography soon became closely associated with it and gained increasing public attention. Founded in , Penthouse magazine went a step further than Playboy and was the first to clearly display genitals, initially covered with pubic hair. The models looked usually directly into the camera, as if they would enter into relationship with the mostly male viewers. Cleo and male nude[edit] In the s, in the mood of feminism, gender equality and light humour, magazines such as Cleo included male nude centrefolds. Unlike the traditional erotic photographs, which use any attractive female subjects, the male nude photographs are usually of celebrities. Internet[edit] The spread of the Internet in the s and increasing social liberalization brought a renewed upsurge of erotic photography. There are a variety of print and online publications, which now compete against the major magazines Playboy, Penthouse and cater for the diverse tastes. Where the subject is presented in a romantic or sexually alluring manner, it may be described as glamour photography.

Nude Photography is an art, it is subtle yet explicit. These are some of the tips for photographers, enthusiasts and Models to keep in mind before such a shoot. Tips for photographers and Models. Written as narrated 1. We decided to take a break and I pulled out a few of my photography magazines and books where I knew there would be examples of some poses that we could aim for. We chose a pose that we wanted to start with â€” a shot of her standing with her back to the camera â€” the focus being her back â€” lit from the side to accentuate her curves. Knowing what we wanted to achieve in this shot helped a lot. Try Black and Whiteâ€” at the start of our shoot we were shooting in color. The results were quite confronting to my model. She is a beautiful woman but even the best of us have a few blemishes or blotches on our skin that can be quite eye catching in shots. In doing so I noticed that the shots completely changed in their look and feel. They became less about the body in the shots, and more about the shapes, the light, the shadows etc. Make sure the heating is on! Not seeing her face on the other hand added a little mystery into the shots. Being naked in front of another person and being that other person can be quite confronting â€” although it can also be quite funny if you let it be. I also had a couple of sheets and blankets handy so that between shots my friend was able to coverup and keep warm. One was with black material behind the model and a couple of spot lights lighting her from the side. We did this with the first shot that I mentioned above and it left us with the effect of her standing in front of a dark background. The other shot was her sitting on a chair that we covered with a white sheet. This we lit with natural light from a great window in my home. My main advice is to keep it simple when it comes to your set up. As a result I had her stand, sit and lay in comfortable positions and found myself moving around her more than having her move around me. We tried a few shots where my subject covered herself up in a number of ways â€” either by using her hands and arms to cover her torso or where she even at one point wore an unbuttoned shirt. As it turned out some of these were her husbands favorites. Over all the experience of photographing a naked person was one that was a great learning experience.

For most photographers, posing seems to be one of those love it or hate it aspects of what we do. Whether you are a very traditional-posed-portrait type of photographer or all the way on the other end of the spectrum as a lifestyle photographer—you will always have to at least give direction to your clients as to how to situate themselves so that they will look as natural as possible. You also want to make sure that your posing suggestions are flattering to your subject. Some photographers are naturally gifted at pulling this off and others have to study and learn techniques that will aid them in this, but posing and giving direction to our clients is a huge part of our job as professionals, whether we like it or not. Posing encompasses much more than just the positioning of your subjects body—it also involves the attitude that you want them to project and the facial expression that you want to capture. Sometimes you can capture drastically different moods in the same pose just by a change of facial expression. One of the main things that I strive for in posing my seniors is to convey movement and fluidity in the image. You want your viewers to engage with the subject of your images—and the first step to achieving that goal is for YOU to be engaging with your subject. Your camera is an extension of your eyes—and if you are engaging with them and making them feel comfortable in front of the camera that will come across in your images. Some practical things to consider for flattering posing: Avoid arms falling straight down at their sides. This makes arms appear larger and it also creates that static appearance. Position arms on hips, up against a wall or fence, overhead, in pockets—front or back—anything that shows movement. Be sure to pay attention to your subjects posture. If you like a particular pose, try to change it up a bit by having your subject look a different direction—off to the side, down, up—all can give very different looks to the same pose. When posing girls in a sitting position, make sure to show movement in their legs. You want to avoid having their legs appear stuck together—especially at a side angle. Have one or both legs bent at the knees, at differing heights to show more fluidity in the pose. Shooting at a slight downward angle, particularly for close-ups, helps to slim your subjects face. It helps to reduce or hide any double chins and is a very flattering angle for most everyone. Be mindful of limbs—a slight bend at the elbows and knees in every pose will always make the image look more natural. Also—in standing positions, direct your subjects to balance their weight more on one side than the other since that is the way that we naturally stand. Even a very slight turn of the hips creates a much more natural look. For guys you want to help position them in order to make them look strong and confident in their images. Something to watch for with guys is the position of their hands when their arms are relaxed—you want to be mindful of hand positioning that appears feminine. If your senior guy plays a sport or an instrument, ask them to bring either along. As long as you are steering away from static posing you can really do well with images that show a genuine part of who they are. One of the most helpful things you can do to improve your posing ideas is to create a posing journal for yourself. It will take time to build up a library of posing that appeals to you, but it can be an invaluable tool to you as you prepare for your sessions. Some of the best images for your posing journal can be found in trendy catalogs and magazines. Just cut out images that appeal to you and jot down what it is that you love about the images and refer to it often. Another thing that can be helpful as you start to build your own portfolio of shots that you love is to take advantage of your phone if you have image library capabilities on it. Inspiration is plentiful online—but, do be careful that you are being inspired to create and not inspired to copy. We all have those whose work we admire and when we see an image that resonates in us—we naturally desire to create the same thing that we see. Even if a particular pose has been done before—and it most likely has—you can make it yours by not focusing so much on the posing itself, but more on connecting with your subject in a way that draws your viewers in—and makes them want to keep looking. These places are usually not that clean, not even remotely. So how do you handle that, do you carry a broom and some sanity towels with you? But, I do warn my clients ahead of time that they will get dirty. Particularly in urban photography settings, which are obviously my favorite, you definitely have grunge to deal with.

Over time public perception of what is acceptable has also broadened. This trend drives the demand and naturally glamour photography is increasing in popularity. Increasing popularity of this genre of photography is not surprising, many women like the whole experience – dressing up, trying on different ideas and accessories, creating different moods. And glamour is the perfect match for that. But there are several factors each of which can mean all the difference for the final result – hair and makeup, clothing and accessories, lights and posing. Of course, each of these are a broad subjects and in this article we will only touch the surface of the posing part. So here follow sample poses that you can use as the starting point for your glamour portraits or simply as an idea for a shot. Good starting pose for an intimate glamour. Works well in different surface settings: Just a different variant for the model lying down. Works very well with all body types. Really nice and lovely pose. Shoot from a low angle. Ask the model to keep her upper body slightly lifted, but the head – slightly tilted down. Toes should always be pointed. A few things need to be checked: Supporting hand must be turned away from the body, stomach muscles should be controlled, and feet need to be stretched. Works only with slim to athletic body types. Not so easy to pose and very demanding for a photographer. In order to shoot this pose successfully you have to pay attention and scan all body parts – hands, head, waist avoid skin creases! Beautiful pose for an outdoor shooting. Ask your model to lay down, curve her back and stretch her feet. Beautiful pose for the model lying on the ground. Upper body should be slightly lifted and the model looking back over her shoulder. Works well with all body types. Try different angles and look for the best position by moving gradually around the model. Easy and simple pose to emphasize a feminine shape. Works also well as a silhouette against a bright background. Variant for fine arts nude photography. Variations are endless with different hand, leg and head positioning. Easy and gentle pose. Eyes looking over her shoulder. Easy yet gorgeous pose. Works well in different settings, both indoors and outdoors. Also suitable for a silhouette shot against a bright background. An absolutely gorgeous pose if done properly. Correct limb positioning is crucial. Works exceptionally well with all body types. Also note that you should make your shots from a slightly elevated angle. Very challenging pose, leg positioning being the decisive factor for good results. Carefully guide your model to the intended postures. High heel shoes are a must. Simple and dignified pose. Eyes looking down to her body creates particularly romantic mood. The raised elbow should be pointing away from the camera. Very feminine and delicate pose. Sometimes a single piece of clothing might be a superb addition to a shot. Thus, the model might partly cover her body. Very helpful aid for creating different poses is utilizing a wall or any other object of a kind. Wall can be used as a place to put hands on, support a body, back, legs etc. Full height at the wall shot. Again, endless variation and shooting angles are possible. Following from the previous, for example, change you angle and shoot as well from the back. An exquisite pose for slim to athletic models. Many variations are possible. Ask the model to curve a body in S shape, twist her hips and change hand positions. Let her turn her head in different directions. Using a sheer textile as a prop creates endless possibilities for the model and photographer to create very rewarding and outstanding results. Especially marvelous looks can be made in windy weather conditions outdoors. Another good idea for a creative glamour photography is to shoot in vast open fields, for example, some cornfield or wildflowers meadow or even in a deserted landscape. As previously mentioned some textile or other piece of clothing is very helpful for the model to come up with some interesting and graceful postures. As a final note I will say once again – each of these initial sample poses is only a starting point. Each pose has endless variations. First of all, the model can always try different face expressions, smiles, head turns, hand and leg placements, body turns and twists etc. Only slight variations can make a completely different pose and a better one! Moreover, always remember to take a shot from different angles up and down, right and left , try changing your distance to subject, try different crops and compositions of your shots. After all, posing is trial and error effort. The more variations you will try, the better results you will get. And I would really like to hear your experience with these posing samples. Please feel free to leave a comment. More Posing Guides If you find this article helpful, you may want to check out previous articles from the posing guide series:
