Study Tips Foundational math: If you have been away from a math class for a long time, or if you are seeing a low Quant percentile i. Start by reading a high reading-level publication, such as New York Times editorials or The Economist for at least 20 minutes each day. Work up your reading stamina until you can read minutes in one sitting. What position would this author most likely agree with? Your study schedule should have minutes for four nights, and a double session on Saturday or Sunday three to four- hours , for up to 6 months. You could shorten the time to three to “ four months but have a plan for the longest possible duration. Take 10 minutes at the end of their study session each day to write down your reflections “ two positives and one negative. This helps you stay accountable i. You can divide the questions in each section into thirds: Every two-three weeks, do an analysis of areas where you are weak and also areas of strength, based on average time and average accuracy. When signing up for a course, our coaches recommend choosing one that meets once a week versus one that meets two or three times a week. The latter may go at an intense pace and realistically, too challenging to keep up with. Keep an Error Log: Log all questions that you get incorrect, as well as any you get correct but take longer than two and a half mins to answer. Be detailed and honest with yourself in your analysis. Review and re-study the concepts you missed, create some flashcards and quiz yourself with them, write out some notes“ and then go back to do the next quiz or question set. If you took a class with a particular provider and liked the teaching method, then using a tutor from the same company might make sense “ the tutor will likely approach the content in a way that is familiar. Usually you will have an initial meeting as well, to make sure it is a good fit. Finding a tutor who got a very high score is great, but knowledge, experience and flexibility are key. Can he or she: Compare, contrast and evaluate different methods? Customize for your strengths and weaknesses? Explain multiple ways to answer a question? Modify strategies along the way? Questions to ask before officially signing up: Does the tutor provide content? Also be sure to ask for references! It helps to know each day what your to-do list includes. This allowed me to remain steadfast in my study prep. On any given day, I would know which topics I had to study and the associated time needed to complete them. Each exam was taken under strict, test-like conditions no pauses, two 8-minute breaks, etc. I took the exams at 8 am on Saturdays same time of day as my official exam. I even packed the same snacks that I would use on test day. This helped improve my focus for the longer reading comprehension passages. As stated above, simulate test day as much as possible.
