Professor Branestawm is in top inventive form once more - and it's hardly his fault if his helpful doglike handbag takes to shoplifting, or his self-elevating flowerbeds biff people on the nose when they bend to sniff the flowers!

Professor Branestawm Save The Incredible Adventures of Professor Branestawm, the first book in the series, shown here in its Puffin paperback edition with cover drawing by W. The name "Branestawm" is a pun , as a pseudo-homophone of the word " brainstorm ". Characters Professor Branestawm is always at work in his "Inventory" creating bizarre inventions, all of which either malfunction or work in unanticipated ways, and which lead him into incredible adventures, often accompanied by his friend Colonel Dedshott of the Catapult Cavaliers soldiers who use catapults as their only weapon , and his housekeeper Mrs Flittersnoop. In "The Professor Borrows a Book", he manages to lose fourteen different copies of the same book from fourteen different public libraries , and has to cycle frantically between fourteen different Pagwells to renew his books to avoid being fined. The Colonel thought the waxwork to be a frozen professor, so he and Mrs Flittersnoop heated it, melting the waxwork. Meanwhile, the Professor was covered along with all the waxworks when he was lost in thoughts. He suddenly stopped thinking and when trying to get out of the fair, was thought to be a living waxwork. The Professor is described in the first book as having, like all great men, simple tastes: His head was simply bald and it simply shone like anything when the sun caught it. Other pairs of spectacles are often mentioned. In "The Wild Waste Paper", she throws what seems to be a bottle of cough medicine into the waste bin. Since the bottle was uncorked to allow air in nothing can live without air , the waste paper in the bin comes to life. For instance, the phrase "No Branestawm invention was going to stand for that" occurs several times in the series. The original book contained a section called seventy-six illustrations by W. Heath Robinson, each with evocative titles such as A telescope of his own invention or With nothing on at all but a big smile referring to a picture of an extra specially young professor. The first edition was illustrated by James Arnold , with George Adamson illustrating the reissue. Je lis avec plaisir no. Wolf Harranth, illustrated by W.
