Fitness program was built around gymnastics, calisthenics, swimming, and fencing. The order also established a 3-day, mile riding test for the cavalry and horse-mounted artillery and a mile ruck march test for the infantry. Manual includes a 4-event fitness performance test: Puts a 2-min time limit on the situps, and scales the scoring according to age. The event had 4 events: Testing also required for BCT, Advanced schools and leadership training lasting 8 weeks or more. One important event change was the inclusion of a 2 mile run for the Advance PT test. Scores adjusted based on age and gender. The proposal was not implemented, partly due to concerns about safety and administering some test items. APRT events were standing long jump, 1-minute rower, yard shuttle, 1 minute push up and 1 mile run. The ACRT was a timed, obstacle course run similar to obstacle courses from the s and s. It included a meter run with weapon; an obstacle course with low hurdles, high crawls and over-under obstacles; a yard casualty drag; a yard run with ammo cans atop a balance beam; point, aim and move drills; a yard ammo can shuttle sprint; and a yard agility sprint " was thrown out due to the cost of materials. Both tests were proposed to be taken one time each year. Army leaders expressed concerns about the scientific basis for the tests, and feasibility of the ACRT, including cost. After seeing the results of a feasibility study, the Army shelved the APRT and ACRT in and ordered a comprehensive study of Army Physical Readiness testing to includes 1 systematic literature review, 2 linking fitness and functional tests to soldering tasks, and 3 validating the test against soldiering tasks. Primary study is due to be completed in early Part of this study is to determine what is required for warrior tasks, battle drills, and common soldier tasks. The aim of the study is to determine what it takes physically to perform the tasks troops do every day. Research includes an experiment on soldiers studying how they perform combat tasks. The study is expected to influence the creation of a physical aptitude test, or a series of tests, that could drastically alter how soldiers are assigned jobs.
