The Hype Queen of OZ: And at the center of the hustle is the hype queen herself, Michelle Johnson. We recently caught up with her to learn what exactly happens behind the scenes at Barista Hustle and if the coffee really is better down under. Jesus, when you lay it all out, it really is a lot! Oftentimes, I stop and question how I even got here! That imposter syndrome is real and there are periods of time where those feelings are magnified, for sure. I pretty much manage and direct the marketing and communications of everything. It looks different depending on what it is, though. You recently moved to Melbourne, Australia. Was it hard to get a visa? I have to thank my colleague, Michael and his wife, Dechen, for that! I call it a capp everywhere else! Around the world Aussie coffee culture is often revered or vilified. Is there anything you wish you could export to the States? I have a few guesses to why this is. Everywhere in Melbourne, the water is ideal to drink and brew coffee with straight from the tap. You will never have to go more than half a kilometer to find a good, specialty coffee shop. Everyone has at least some basic knowledge of what specialty is and the culture is completely normalized. At the same time, the community of coffee pros seem to operate differently than those in the US. Ask me again in a year! If I could export anything from here to the US, it would be the dairy. Australian milk is sweeter, richer, and more wholesome. Milk drinks here are so delicious. It gets me in the feels. Do you think anything has changed? I also see a lot of white people speaking for Black folks and other people of color instead of just passing the mic along. I think we all need to do more to support these types of groups and events as much as we support those that center other marginalized identities. The ultimate dream, though, would be to drop off the map for a decade and buy a coffee farm to live and work on. If you could only drink one coffee for the rest of your life, what would it be?

Fitness Lost your motivation in the gym? Can you walk us through a typical day? Every day tends to be pretty different but it always starts the same. As a single parent, juggling a busy role, my mornings with the kids are pretty important to me. Seeing my daughter off to school and spending time with my son on the way to school are a consistent rituals that I like to honour. After dropping the kids at school, I typically go and train before heading to my day at Sweat It. My role there is Head of Concept, Training and Development, which means that I oversee the trainers, the quality of product in the studio and I work closely with Ben, the founder, on future concepts and ideas. Tell us about the concept behind Sweat It? How does it compare to other workouts? Sweat It is a dual concept studio that offers treadmill interval training, along side functional strength and conditioning training. What we are bringing to the London Fitness Boutique scene is something a little more functional and raw. We have a broad range of equipment in the studio, adding Landmines, Resistance Bands and Pull-Up Bars to the already tried and tested offering of Dumbbells and Benches. We are also the only studio in the UK to have the full parachute mode on our treadmills, which is an element we will soon be launching. Greater variety of equipment brings a greater variety of workouts, which allow for more adaptations to training and greater results. Sweat It How does training make you feel? When I train, I always give my best and even that is incredibly rewarding. I have the best job in the world. I get to see my own clients grow stronger and more confident, then I get to see my trainers crushing it in the studio, becoming better and better. THEN I get to see their clients getting stronger and more confident. What is the best thing about being a mum? Ah that is such a hard questions to answer right now, especially as my kids are driving me up the wall today!! It happens to everyone at some point. We need to stop trying to keep up with everyone else. Sweat it Favourite tunes to workout to? Ah this really varies depending on what I am doing. But a tune which is guaranteed to squeeze a little extra out of me? Can you describe your perfect day out in London? Oooh, have I got a fully day? Okay, this is easy! Get the kids up early, take them for pancakes at The Breakfast Club and then head over to Greenwich Park and enjoy the sun, maybe bring a picnic, climb some hills, enjoy the view. What are 3 things you wish you could tell your younger self? I cannot buy into half-assing anything. I believe in all or nothing at all.

Side hustles give you the opportunity to start small, as you learn and work your way up. The nice thing about side hustles is, you can commit as much or as little as you chose to, and there is a ton of flexibility involved. I learned how to French braid when I was five years old, both of my parents were cosmetologist – my mom, a hairstylist, and my dad, a barber. It started with me doing my own hair, or nails, and people would inquire. Doing hair and nails carried on through college and every now and then, I still get calls today to do hair. Coffee shops, shoe stores, retail, and more. So, yes, my doing hair was a side hustle. I started a special side job back in , along with a partner. I remembered us having conversations about where we were in our careers and where we wanted to go. No real elaborate plans, we just did it. Flew us out to Philly and spent a decent amount of money with us and we delivered. Even better, we still have a ton of growing to do. In the end, my days went like this: Believing in what you do, and having passion behind it, really takes away the feeling of it being work. Not because it was a threat or competition. It was because when you work for a corporation, they want to have complete control of your time and attention. I mean, he called a minimum of 20 times. When I finally stepped out to answer he asked if I had a business on the side, and told me he found out about the award, and that his boss had been calling him for more information. They fired me soon after. However, as life will have it, I left much sooner. Give it a try!

6: Introducing the New Queen of Hustle - THISDAYLIVE

I knew that I didn't want my side hustle to stay a side hustle If you've ever thought about starting a business, side hustles (jobs) are a great way to build and develop your ideas, while maintaining a steady income.

Never heard of it? Let me break it down for you without spoiling the show completely. After a drug deal goes wrong, Teresa is forced to run for her life. She can only depend on herself if she wants stay alive. This got me to thinkingâ€¦ How do I slay? What am I Queen of? I am the Queen of the Mama Hustle! Life as a blogging stay at home mom of three is pretty awesomeâ€¦ and also pretty chaotic My two youngest children are 2 years apart and are always fighting over everything from toys to my attention. They are like crazy little people. Crazy little people that I just love to pieces! Some days at home with the kids are a breeze while others are not. I find myself venturing off into new business opportunities as each day passes which is amazing but also a bit overwhelming at times. Add my kids to the mix and, well, things can get a bit hyphy up in here. How I make time for ME! Work hard, play hard! I shower without an audience. If I am unable to shower alone in the morning before my kids wake up, I make a point to go in for a second or sometimes first shower for the day when my husband comes home from work. Is it weird that I find it a luxury to wash my hair with my eyes closed?? I let them sleep! This may seem like an obvious thing, but keep reading. Haha Mom life at its finest! I get out of the house without the kids! Now, I have to admit, this one does not happen nearly as often as it should. The kids will be ok! Leave them with a trusted family member or babysitter and enjoy yourself! We took advantage of every nap and early bed timeâ€¦ we may have even stayed up way past our own bedtimes without realizing it. This show sucked us in! Queen of the South is available now on Netflix. So now I want to know, have you seen the show? If so, how can you relate to Teresa? If not, I want to know how you slay and what you are Queen of! Tell me in the comments below!
