On the eastern edge, the wilderness boundary juts out suddenly to protect the glacially carved Oh-Be-Joyful valley. When coming from interstate 70, head south on Hwy 82 to Carbondale, then south on Hwy to the town of Marble. Recommended Hikes The lack of fourteeners, and large alpine lakes keeps the number of visitors lower than elsewhere. However, expect weekend hikes in popular areas to get crowded. Much of the Raggeds wilderness is subalpine forest, but scenery of snow capped jagged peaks and lush alpine meadows abound. The upper portion of the valley is well watered with lush greenery and an excellent wildflower display. With the Ruby Range as a backdrop, this hike is a must. Begin at the Oh-be-Joyful trailhead a few miles north of Crested Butte. To get there from the town of Crested Butte, drive north on CO Forest road follows the Slate River valley. Continue until FR and the Oh-Be-Joyful campground and trailhead appears in the valley below on the left. The hike begins immediately outside of the parking area and you must cross Slate Creek on foot. It can be more than knee deep at times. The Oh-Be-Joyful Trail is steep in many areas and the approach to the pass is several miles in length. The hike to the pass and back will take most of a day. Click for a map of Oh-Be-Joyful Pass trail. The red and purple hued peaks of the Ruby range rise to the east. If you hike far enough the trail drops into Dark Canyon where Anthracite Creek has cut steep canyon walls. To reach the trailhead, begin in Crested Butte on CO A left on Whiterock Ave leads to CO The trail ascends through forests of aspen, but quickly levels out on a plateau with spectacular views to the west. Head left to continue on the Dark Canyon Trail, or head right to climb to the pass. Wilderness Maps If you are planning a trip, I highly recommend this tear-resistant, waterproof trail map made by National Geographic. Trail Illustrated maps are topographic maps that show all the local trails as well as the details of the wilderness terrain. The map clearly marks trails, shows important landmarks, is printed on tear-resistant plastic and is the choice of hikers for navigating the backcountry.
