I want to get the kids more involved this year and really celebrate with them, but not really sure how. What do you guys do to make Ramadan special for the kids? I totally understand Summertime Mommy. Do the best you can. Never works any other time of year. How old are your kids? My kids 5,3,2 have just sort of gotten into Ramadan this past year or so. For my friends who have kids old enough to fast, a big appeal is special breakfasts. Everybody gets up early Everybody yells "Assalamu Alaikum Mr. My kids really like it. When we were in NYC, we used to go to Iftar at the mosque a lot We read Ramadan stories at night too. So, while my husband loves something involving rice and meat I always aspire to do a Ramadan Advent calendar for lack of better term , but never do. I think this year, I might let them each put a foil star on a chart to count down to Eid, as they love stars. How many times have you: What if you could drive right through all the days of Ramadan without feeling the motivation dip in the middle? I have not been very in on many of the conversations lately Dh and I have made pretty massive changes to our family life during this time, moving from town to farm, working a lot of hours, etc. This will be my first Ramadan in 3 years as a stay-home mom and I am ramping up for it. We are trying to tie up all the loose ends on the farm and have the hardest work done in advance of the fast. This is the first day not working for me, and I need to focus on getting the house in order. I have been freezing and pickling produce, so cooking ahead for the month is out of the question--but also probably not needed anyway. I assume I will be doing much of my canning in the evenings, and alhamdulillah!!! Ds will be doing some practice fasting this year He is 8, and I know there are kids who fast full days at that point, but I am not pushy. So maybe a lantern or candle or just the table. I am excited about this Ramadan and looking forward to the challenge. Liquesce, any word on your gallbladder? I had gallbladder issues before, many years ago Since then, the pains have gone away. I know the heart-racing, cold-sweating pain of that. Originally Posted by ljooj Liquesce, any word on your gallbladder? Retired the blog, just not enough time In fact, I also quit my day job for the same reason I actually get to focus on it this year! I am still breastfeeding but I have heard that you should try Have any of you bought "Christmas lights" like the multicolored ones and used them to decorate? It is just not going to be the same without him. And I likely will feed the kids early and put them to bed. I have a question for any of you with older kidsdo any of you have kids who fast and go to public school? I for some reason just was thinking about that a day or so ago, wondering if that would be a problem in a public school It will be fun, to be three atleast, to fast!

Khani, who currently resides in the U. An engaging storyteller, Khani filled the ears of audiences with advice ranging from how to make your child love to get up in the morning without wanting to hit you with a pillow , to how to instill a love of Islam in his or her heart. For example, prayer times should be a time of great joy for young children, not something that is rushed. Parents can tickle and play on the prayer mat and display affection before starting, so that children have a positive association with this important ritual. Pick up the Quran, take your child in your arms and read together. Ask him or her to point out words they know or that you want them to learn. A Pen, which wrote about everything that would happen. Look for topics that would engage children – study the animals in the Quran and work on crafts that relate back. Make the adhan a fixture in your home. This starts at home. Parents should make time for their children – why do teachers often know more about our own children than we do? No one likes to get up in the morning and immediately head to work, for example. Give children at least one hour and a half before they have to leave the house, or start an activity. How best to wake them up? Massage them, kiss them – make waking up a bonding activity that everyone looks forward to. Make sure children are well fed before starting the day. Only buy them what they need, not what they want. Let them give of their time and their effort, and they will soon prefer to give, rather than receive. Talk about the point of celebrating achievements – for birthdays, celebrate mothers who achieved giving birth and raising children! Show how every day is St. Other health topics from the Seerah include information on how to keep bodies clean. For daughters, show the honour of hijab, emphasizing its beauty as something a woman voluntarily does for the sake of Allah. Mothers should talk about how they feel about their hijab, and share their own experiences with it. In Surah Al Baqarah, Allah Talks about the decision to wean a child as one that both parents should make. The aim of having a child was to raise someone up who would carry on the mantle of righteousness.

Reply Shamsa September 7, at pm. Its been 2 years since I send goody bags with a little descriptive note on both eids to my sons school, having everyone else know its a recognised holiday made it mandatory on me to utilise the opportunity and introduce islam to my sons class, a small effort to create awareness and combat islamaophobia.
