Records of the Connecticut State Society of the Cincinnati, by Connecticut Society of the Cincinnati., , Connecticut Historical Society edition, Records of the Connecticut State Society of the Cincinnati,

The Society, composed of officers who had served for three years in the American army during the war of the Revolution, was organized upon an "Institution" which breathed a lofty spirit of patriotism, friendship and benevolence. Unfortunately for the Society, as it proved, the right of membership descended from the original members and officers in the line of eldest male descent. This regulation at once created a feeling of prejudice and opposition toward the Society throughout the country; a feeling which the French idea of liberty and equality so prevalent in the United States a few years later probably served to increase. It was believed that the Society was an attempt to establish a military aristocracy in the new republic. The opposition to it was so strong in Connecticut that the Society was refused an act of incorporation by the General Assembly in October 1783. This was the beginning of the end; for at its annual meeting on July 4 of the following year, 1784, the Society passed a formal vote of dissolution because of the strong prejudice against it. At the same meeting votes were passed that each member or his legal heirs should be entitled to receive his proportion of the funds of the Society, and that all moneys not paid to members by the 10th day of the following May should be placed in the treasury of Yale College in trust, to be paid over on application to the several persons entitled to receive them. A vote was also passed that all the books, papers and other documents of the Society be deposited in the hands of John Mix of Farmington, the then Secretary. Lieutenant John Mix died February 23, 1785, and on January 12, 1786, Egbert Cowles, the administrator on his estate, delivered these books of records, accompanying manuscript documents and printed pamphlets, to the Connecticut Historical Society, in whose custody they have since remained. The records proper are contained in two small volumes; the earlier consisting of 168 pages of which three are blank, the other of 58 written pages followed by many blank pages. Together they form the volume here published, the reproduction being the exact size of the original pages. Senator Bulkeley, who for more than a score of years has been a valued member of the Connecticut Historical Society, and who with his brother the late General William Henry Bulkeley has previously presented the Society with one volume of its Collections, now presents to the Society these two volumes of Cincinnati Records and Papers. A number of orations and a sermon delivered before the Society at its annual meetings were printed. With the exception of that of Colonel David Humphreys of 1783, which was probably paid for by himself, all were published at the request and the charge of the Society. As they form a part of its life and activities, a list of them is given below. The toasts given at some of the dinners were also printed; but no copies of any of these minor publications are now known. In commemoration of the Independence of the United States. printed. It appeared in print during the year with the following title: Addressed to the State Society of the Cincinnati in Connecticut. Printed by Hudson and Goodwin, M. An oration delivered before the Society by James Gould at the annual meeting of July was requested for publication but apparently was not given. It was later issued with the following title: A petition asking that the Connecticut Society be restored was presented by the delegation. At the next triennial meeting of the General Society in the restoration of the Connecticut Society was voted as soon as it should comply with certain conditions relating to its finances. At the next following triennial meeting in , the conditions having been complied with, the Connecticut Society was " recognized and the representatives thereof duly admitted as members " of the General Society. On July 4th of that year a meeting was held in the Senate Chamber of the State Capitol at Hartford, a full complement of officers was elected, and the Connecticut Society became fully reorganized and restored.
