Geography of Chicago The city of Chicago lies in the Chicago Plain, a flat and broad area characterized by little topographical relief. The few low hills are sand ridges. North of the Chicago Plain, steep bluffs and ravines run alongside Lake Michigan. Along the southern shore of the Chicago Plain, sand dunes run alongside the lake. Surrounding the low plain are bands of moraines in the south and west suburbs. These areas are higher and hillier than the Chicago Plain. A continental divide , separating the Mississippi River watershed from that of the Great Lakes and Saint Lawrence River , runs through the Chicago area. The five most common tree species are buckthorn , green ash , boxelder , black cherry , and American elm. These resources perform important functions in carbon storage, water recycling, and energy saving. Downtown Chicago is at the far left by the lake in the photo.
