Oliver have discovered a way to detect almost any virus, bacteria or toxin using sensor technology. Every year, up to , people worldwide die from the flu while millions more become severely ill. These biological sensors, like the chemical sensors, are capable of detecting Countless others around the globe 50 viruses in a sneeze droplet. The handheld unit can detect explosurface to mimic the actual biological sives, nerve agents, weapons of mass destruc- action – and therefore identify – the tion and environmental pollutants. Early detection – before symptoms even begin to appear – could save lives by giving doctors a head start on treatment. T Plum Orchard he opportunity to research a rare and little-known collection of original Japanese art became a lifechanging experience for graduate student Linda Fleming. Not only did her work win a Graduate Research Excellence Award and pique the interest of the renowned Arts of Asia magazine, it renewed a latent interest in art history and opened doors for further research and career possibilities. The opportunity to research the enigmatic art collection arose in her Japanese art history class. Wilkinson is so passionate about her area of expertise that I enthusiastically enrolled in the class and, then, other related Asian classes. I became hooked on the wonder and uniqueness of Japanese art and culture, and renewed my first love, art history. A couple of months later in January , they traveled to Fort Hays to photograph the art so Fleming could begin her research. None of the 40 works of various sizes and styles painted on silk scrolls or mulberry paper had been researched or published before. Award-winning graduate student Linda Fleming, third from left, credits three art faculty mentors, Mark White, Marcella Sirhandi and Nancy Wilkinson, with encouraging her to unravel mysteries of the Leora Stroup Collection of Japanese art. Jurojin, a figural painting of the Japanese god of longevity, was attributed to the Unkoku School by Stroup. She discovered how family history and status, talent, economics and politics can motivate an artist and influence even the manner in which he paints. She credits Mark White, associate professor of art history and member of her thesis committee, with encouraging her to pursue the meaning of the calligraphy. Fleming says studying and researching Asian and, in particular, Japanese art, has been a joyful and thrilling surprise of self-discovery. There are also economic benefits to the new facility. With the increased capabilities, OSU researchers will have an opportunity to bring in new grants and contracts to the state and increase the influx of federal dollars. Yet for Sean Sutton, taking over as head coach after his father, Eddie, is a blessing and an honor. As the Sutton family moves into a new era, Trena Sutton is prepared to take on the challenge as wife of a head coach. Most of the time, we coach as he does as a head are outside doing some kind coach. That has not changed. Head coaching is whole life. And I believe he of the expectations what he has always wanted will have a national champito do. A national champito hold her tongue. He wants to do great onship would be really special. Each is married to an OSU head coach and has learned how to deal with the ups and downs of the season while living in the public spotlight. For them, life off the court, mat or ring revolves around their husband, their children, and just as often, the team. While John coaches, Toni stays busy home-schooling their four children, ages 3, 5, 7 and 9. Our oldest gets to travel with his dad quite a bit, and I think one of the best things for the kids is they are learning at a young age how to interact with adults. Over the years, both Toni and John have developed a parental mentality for the wrestlers on the team, especially those who have traveled from other states to wrestle at OSU. We are pseudo-parents for a number of boys on the team. John gives good advice to his athletes. An instructor motivated her to be an early user of the Mac computer, and later, when she moved to Hollywood, she used her design skills to create music CD graphics for high-profile entertainers. When DVDs came on the scene, Braun revolutionized the industry by creating exciting, user-friendly interfaces and menus that reflected the emotion and intensity of the films – James Bond DVDs being some of the most interactive and compelling.

The first airmen to die in combat since the Persian Gulf War fell on the deadliest day for U. They died on a bleak mountainside as they and their comrades were surprised by enemy fire and their survivors shouted into their radios for air support. Two airmen, four soldiers and a Navy SEAL died as they fell under enemy fire in two separate helicopter assaults on March 4. Ten other Americans were injured, some seriously, in fierce fighting in the allied air and ground offensive code-named Operation Anaconda. The bloody battle pitted several hundred al-Qaida and Taliban soldiers against a handful of U. Two Army MH Chinook helicopters were disabled by enemy fire. It was the first time American helicopters were brought down in Afghanistan. Nearly 14 hours after they came under fire, 21 U. Among the dead were Air Force combat controller Tech. Chapman, 36, and pararescueman Senior Airman Jason D. Vincent Savino, said the fallen airman was hit by machine-gun fire as he treated wounded soldiers and darted out of a helicopter several times to pull others to safety. I know several soldiers who are alive today because of him. Ridout, died in the Feb. The Army soldiers who died March 4 were Spc. Crose, 27; and Sgt. Petty Officer 1st Class Neil C. The battle in the mountains around the Shah-e-Kot Valley will be remembered as a testament to heroism: A bloodied, outnumbered band of U. Call it "Black Hawk Down" in the snow. Details of the firefight and rescue were sketchy as of March 7. This account is based on briefings by Pentagon officials and military officers at U. American and Afghan troops fighting in the wider operation concede that U. Rather than retreat as they had done in previous battles, the al-Qaida forces holed up in mountain passes and cave complexes apparently decided to stay and fight to the death. That apparent miscalculation by the allied forces proved deadly on March 4. Once there, they had planned to search for al-Qaida forces hidden in the folds of the mountains. The Chinook found the enemy sooner than expected. Machine-gun fire and what was believed to be a rocket-propelled grenade forced the helicopter down. Twenty-one commandos from the Air Force, Army and Navy poured out of the helicopter into a hail of al-Qaida bullets. In the ensuing firefight, six Americans were killed. Ten of the remaining 15 were wounded. The survivors scattered and scrambled for cover, but there were no trees, only rocks, said Rear Adm. Craig Quigley, a Central Command spokesman. As they crouched behind rocks under heavy fire, the commandos screamed into their radios for air support. At a mobile command post an unknown distance away, U. They could see what one Pentagon official called "a large number of enemy forces" advancing. Within minutes, F Eagles and F Fighting Falcons were on the scene, pounding al-Qaida positions and trying to drive back the enemy. AC gunships, which fly at lower altitudes, soon joined the fight. According to reports from the area, they strafed al-Qaida positions with their M mm howitzers and 25 mm Gatling guns, which indicates the gunships were ACU Spookys. The gunships must have been a welcome sight, one Pentagon official ventured on March 5. An F can launch a powerful bomb, but an AC can loiter over the scene for hours. Second helicopter hit At 3 a. One of those Chinooks was hit immediately by a rocket-propelled grenade. In a tremendous stroke of luck, the grenade did not explode. Both Chinooks took off hastily and flew out of the battle zone to a safe landing area. When the helicopters landed safely, the crew discovered to its horror that Roberts, the year- old Navy SEAL, was missing. He apparently fell out as the Chinooks retreated from the hostile fire. The Chinook that had not been hit by the grenade returned to the scene to drop off six commandos on a rescue mission. Find Roberts, then back up the crew of the downed Chinook on the mountainside. John Rosa, a Pentagon spokesman, told reporters March 5. Ralph Mills said Roberts died of a bullet wound after surviving a fall from the helicopter. A reporter quoted military officers as saying that a Predator recorded footage of al-Qaida soldiers killing Roberts. Frank Hagenbeck, commander of U. Pentagon officials marvel that the two U. Ensign Gibson attended Burlington junior college where he played baseball, basketball, football, was class president and student council president. Somewhere in Australia, August 15, I have arrived in Australia okay, and really had a wonderful trip. I signed a safe arrival card before I left, censored, so I expect that you have gotten it by this time. We docked at a couple of ports and had two days and nights free time. The people treated us as if we were really Superman. I had a spot of tea and coffee, which was really appreciated. A lovely steak, all for nothing. Over here the people all drive up the wrong side of the street. The steering wheels were all on the right side of the car and the way they come up the road you think it was something. The train cars are all about half as large as ours and sure do look out of place. Of course you realize my mail is all censored and it kind of holds me down. When I get home I will really have one trip that nobody can take a way for me. There are lots of Iowa boys here, and they are really a nice bunch of fellows. It is really neat, a nice little outfit, so guess that I will try to write several letters tonight. Overhear our money is done up in pounds, shillings, sixpence, three pence and pennies. These pennies are as big as our half-dollar back home. We can buy Coca-Cola for three pence, which is about three cents back in the states, ice cream for four pence and cigarettes for eight pence. Pence is pennies here. So maybe that will relieve some of the underway. I sure do hate it that bill last coming with me and really hope that he gets out of the state to see all the things I have. While mother here is what I know you are going to appreciate my address. Well I guess that is it. I had better sign off for now and hope to hear from you real soon. Goodbye now, and lots of love to all, Pat Wallace Mrs.
