And then wait a little more. Owing to the vagaries of how artists are actually nominated for the Cleveland shrine, no group or individual is guaranteed a spot in the hall, no matter how big an impact they may have had on popular music. Yet others, whose talent, appeal and commercial success pales in comparison to more deserving performers, get their ticket stamped during their first year of eligibility. All of which brings us, in a roundabout way, to the long-running rock band Heart. The Wilsons joined an earlier version of the band in their native Seattle. They put everything on hold in the mids so that Nancy Wilson could raise a family, while Ann continued to tour with her own band and occasionally made appearances with her sister at special events and shows. In , Heart, which headlines Saturday night, Jan. There are currently 30 musicians who fit the category of former members of Heart. But none of those things really end up. And for those who may be shy about trying something new for fear of an unfavorable taste-bud assault, the staff at the Toga Bar is among a property-wide team trained to apprise patrons of how each brew should taste. They might have completely different taste profiles. You can almost use each one as a class by itself, and build dinners off of it, or tasting menus, things of that nature. At the Toga Bar there are now at least 10 taps dedicated to craft drafts at all times, along with the standard staples like Miller and Coors Light. There will be fourto six-ounce pours of each beer. It should be a really cool event. Bottle-service tables are available on weekend nights and suggested dress is upscale casual. Posh bar and dining. Specialty cocktails and wide variety of wines by the glass.

Power play Montana unions critical of new federal carbon reduction plan by Alex Sakariassen Last week was a time to celebrate or decry the overreaching arm of the federal government, depending on which side of the Clean Power Plan debate you were listening to. One of the more stirring responses, however, spoke not of environmental degradation, detriments to public health or an abuse of federal rulemaking but of fears over the hundreds of jobs the Clean Power Plan allegedly threatens. As it is, I can barely keep up with HBO. Restoring our manufacturing sector or even holding a job is out of the question, what with this damned government. At this moment, an Oath Keepers security team is patrolling the claim of miner George Kornec, who has received noncompliance letters from the U. Forest Service for building an unauthorized garage on his claim. First they came for the noncompliant miners, and I said nothing, because I was not a mineral rights attorney. But by such letters does tyranny usurp freedom. The Forest Service claims Kornec needed approval to build a garage on his claim, citing a law passed by Congressâ€” another branch of the federal governmentâ€”in But the Forest Service says he missed a deadline to file renewal paperwork in , so technically his current claim originated then. You may remember them from , when they supported rancher Cliven Bundy in his grazing dispute with the Bureau of Land Management. For approximately 20 years, Bundy had refused to apply for a permit to graze his cattle on federal land. Now, over a year later, the Oath Keepers are once again protecting freedom by wandering around with gunsâ€”this time in Lincoln. We ensure that the people we bring here into your community have been thoroughly vetted. None of them are there to provoke violence. Thank God, the first American, that enough patriots care about the Constitution to protect it from federal legislation, the courts that interpret it and the Forest Service employees who enforce their decisions. The only way I can see this operation going badly is if retired Sgt. Barring that outlandish scenario, this mineral rights dispute will benefit from the sound guidance that only armed citizens who are not geologists or attorneys can provide. You have to lease it, and the rent payable is your interpretation of whether the last 60 years of mining law are constitutional. But we are Americans. We have a Constitution and the guns to interpret it. When a tyrannical Forest Service threatens our freedom, we do not stand down. We load up our weapons and stand around. Dan Brooks writes about politics, culture and killing time at combatblog. That leaves us with millions of dollars in investment in what will eventually be stranded assets. But so far, this year has proved to be a disappointment. The biggest surprise has come in coal. Electric utilities shifted en masse from coal to natural gas as gas prices dropped sharply in late and early One thing about Peabody, the largest private coal company in the world, is that it is consistent in its outlook, even if it is consistently wrong. But buyers for that coal are becoming increasingly hard to find, with many looking to other energy sources. Ultimately, it all adds up to a net loss on the fossil fuel side of the railroad business. In the end, it always comes down to business, and no business wants to be left with stranded assets. Working with you to make

Missoula more sustainable since Shop. Police looking for a man who stole two phones from a convenience store in Orem, Utah, apprehended suspect John White after he flagged down the investigating officers to ask for directions. They noticed that White matched the description given them by the store clerk and said the address he asked about was the same as that on a slip of paper the thief had left behind. Two-night minimum stay required. Taxes and fees not included. Other restrictions may apply. During a routine traffic stop in Dallas, Texas, Mario Miramontes, 22, hoped to conceal his arrest warrant by giving the officer the name of his cousin, Christopher Ayala, Stephen Frankie Daniel, 21, was caught robbing a gas station convenience store in Snellville, Ga. Brown, who happened to be waiting in line behind him. Join us for the Enduro Style mountain biking competition. Police had no trouble catching Chester Michael Schaffer, 30, who they suspected of robbing a convenience store in Hampton, Va. Shackelford said, trying to make his getaway on a moped. While serving time in the Gwinnett County, Ga. A police officer stopped a car for a traffic violation in Clayton, Mo. Meacham obliged but then shoved the officer and fled on foot. He ducked into a building, which turned out to be St. Louis County police headquarters. Andrew James Joffe, 24, called to report that he was lost and being chased by wild hogs in Pasco County, Fla. Deputies who responded located Joffe and then discovered he had an open warrant for driving with a suspended license. Joffe admitted taking it and other items from a car. Police Chief John Miller said Beasley was quickly arrested on multiple charges. Police arrested a year-old man in Folehill, England, after observing him steal the license plates from a parked van that was actually an unmarked police vehicle on assignment. Micah Hatcher, 36, was charged with auto theft after he drove a stolen vehicle into the Washington State Patrol district office parking lot in Bellevue. Hatcher had been arrested a few days earlier and came to the district office to retrieve some belongings that had been taken then. Troopers said they were alerted to the stolen vehicle by a witness who recognized it from a Facebook post and followed Hatcher to his destination. The opening came more than two years after Flathead announced its plans for Bigfork and roughly four years after it opened a second location in downtown Missoula. Flathead followed up its latest expansion in June with the first-ever release of its beer in cans. Even with the new facility, Jacoby estimates Flathead is maxed out at 4, barrels of beer this year. He is already looking into adding new tanks to bump that number up to 7, barrels in , a move that would both satisfy locals and help Flathead put its cans in the hands of drinkers in Bozeman and Helena before next summer. In the past five years alone, nearly a dozen companies in Billings, Bozeman, Missoula, the Flathead Valley and elsewhere have announced or completed ambitious expansion plans. Some of the latest include the two-year-old Philipsburg Brewing Company, opening a second location for the purpose of packaging beer in aluminum bottles, and the year-old Kalispell Brewing Company, which more than doubled its brewing capacity this spring. Newcomers continue to pop up regularly as well, pushing the total number of Montana breweries from barely two dozen in to 59 now. State records indicate there is one more licensed brewery that has yet to open. According to the Boulder-based Brewers Association, the number of operating breweries in the United States has grown from 1, in to 3, in , the highest total in the nation since the s. The number of craft brewery closures has fallen dramatically in that same span. While new breweries opened last year, only 46 breweries closed. With the grand opening of the Missoula Brewing Company off North Reserve last month, Missoula itself now has 10 taprooms. The rampant growth in recent years had prompted much speculation about a saturation point. Brewers were estimating as far back as that Missoula could support seven breweries, tops. Who wants to go to the same brewery every single day? But domestics continued to dominate. The availability of craft on tap at watering holes like the Rhino and the Missoula Club slowly grew. When Big Sky Brewing came on the scene in with its first brew, Whistling Pig Red Ale, the brewery wrestled more than 60 tap handles away from Rainier in just a few weeks. In many ways, the recent craft beer glut reminds Big Sky Brewing co-founder Neal Leathers of that early buzz. The following years saw numerous openings throughout the state, Leathers says, and there was a lot of talk of a bubble poised to burst. By comparison, Big Sky intended from day one to be a packaging brewery. Following the successful fight for onpremise consumption, brewers increasingly turned their attention to lifting the 10-barrel cap, hoping to expand dis- photo by Cathrine L. starting breweries were starting them with the thought of being a packaging brewery where they wanted to go national or regional or whatever. By the early s, however, a wave of closures washed over the state. Lang Creek, Milestown and Spanish Peaks managed to hold on for a number of years before shuttering their doors, which, in the case of Spanish Peaks, happened abruptly and with little public explanation. Leathers attributes the staying power of players in this latest surge to a different Leathers says. Rather than making a case for craft taps to whiskey- and domestic-drinking tavern owners who are unfamiliar with the product, Leathers and others now find themselves competing with other craft breweries or even specific beer styles. Ryan Newhouse, a Missoula-based beer blogger and author of Montana Beer: A Guide to Breweries in Big Sky Country, concurs that increased awareness of and demand for craft beer by customers have tribution without sacrificing popular and lucrative taprooms. The issue often pitted the industry against powerful tavern interests, and lack of legislative progress on this front has prompted several breweries to undergo complex legal restructuring to meet their goals. The lead-up to the Montana Legislature saw the emergence of a proposal to allow breweries to obtain bar licenses and vice versa. House Bill , while supported by the Montana Brewers Association, drew fierce backlash from a select group of brewers and blurred the once-clear political division between breweries and tavern owners. Craft beer commanded just 5 percent of the total market share for beer sales in the U.
