As the name suggests, the Leaning Tower of Pisa is leaning. Its foundation was poured on soft subsoil. At first, the tower did not lean because it was not very heavy. The soil was able to support its weight. This was too much weight for the soil. One side of the tower started to sink into the soil. The lean got worse as they kept building. This allowed the tower to settle in the ground. If it had not had time to settle, it would have toppled over. Workers came back after the war and added more to the tower. In the s, an Italian decided he wanted to show off the tower more. However, the workers struck water. It made the tower lean even more. They filled them with concrete. Around , the Italian government decided the Leaning Tower of Pisa was not safe for visitors anymore. During the construction, they helped decrease the amount of the lean. The tower was still leaning, but the lean had not changed. That meant the tower was stable. They did not know what was causing the lean. This caused a flood. He had his workers drill holes into the foundation. In , it was open for visitors again. They had good news. Since the tower is stable, it will likely last a long time. They yawn when they wake up. They yawn when their ears are plugged up. What is a yawn? In the 17th century other scientists studied yawning. Today, scientists think yawning has to do with changing states.
