In order to have a chance of persuading your audience members to agree with your point of view, choosing good persuasive speech topics is important. Most couples, it seems, would pick the sex of their children if they had the option. In countries like China, couples feel more pressure because of birth limits. One recent study has shown that more than forty percent of couples worldwide would choose the sex of their child if possible. Proponents of gender selection have a strong argument and quite a bit of support from a number of different places. Ronald Ericsson, called "Dr. Sperm" by many, has been marketing a home test kit to help couples choose the gender of their child. As a result, couples can spend thousands of dollars trying to create a baby of their choice, only to be disappointed. This can result of the termination of such pregnancies. Not only is gender selection dangerous, but it can create sex distortion ratios, particularly in countries where one sex is the preferred member of society. Proponents of gender selection, though, have come up with an answer to this one as well. Suresh Nayak, an Indian Ob-Gyn, suggested that the fear that sex selection would change the natural ratios was unfounded because the practice is only used by a fraction of couples who can afford it. That fact, though, may soon change. As the procedures get increasingly cheaper, more couples are taking advantage of them. Fertility clinics are literally swamped with couples trying to create designer babies. By the end of , more than cases of successful gender selected babies were reported. Many schools are starting to study the procedure to make it more available to couples. Undoubtedly, this procedure will distort the natural gender ratios if enough people can afford it. If some doctors and scientists have their way, everyone will soon be able to afford the procedure. There is some light at the end of this tunnel, however. Gender selection has finally been banned in many countries on the continents of Europe and Asia. Perhaps they realize that this practice is not only unethical and dangerous, it will eventually lead to couples wanting to create designer babies by choosing hair and eye color, levels of intelligence, and even height! If we continue to allow gender selection, serious, dangerous problems could occur in our society. Gender selection is a powerful tool that science does not yet fully understand how to use. If we do not draw the line between wants and needs early, there will be no stopping wealthy parents in the future who want to choose all of the characteristics of their babies, which will undoubtedly create problems in the human race and promote intolerance towards others. By discouraging parents to choose the genders of their babies, we are encouraging our children to have fewer prejudices and accept others, regardless of sex and gender preferences. The only acceptable way to choose the gender of a child is through adoption. Your browser does not support the audio element. End of Example of a Persuasive Speech An example of a persuasive speech such as this one will hopefully give you some ideas on how to structure your speech. I really hope you enjoyed this example of a persuasive speech! I certainly enjoyed researching it and writing it because I truly believe that gender selection is a slippery slope and NOT one we should be going down. A right to food, a selection from speeches: 5. A right to food, a selection from speeches. by Addeke H Boerma; Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The original source of the speech is here. I did modify the speech at lot of places to suit my taste. The fourth Toastmasters speech project guides you to use simple, but descriptive language in your speeches. The aims for this speech project focus on your selection of words and phrases: Choose words and grammar which communicate clearly. Choose words and grammar which appeal to the senses. A general approach could be to choose any of the following approach: Choose Descriptive or Story-based Topics Any topic can work, but to flex your speechwriting muscles, choose a topic which lends itself to vivid descriptions. Speeches based around stories or experiences will challenge you to select words and phrases to transport your audience from their chairs to the setting where your speech takes place. Use Sensory Language Make your audience see what you see, feel what you feel, taste what you taste, smell what you smell, and hear what you hear. Transport your audience to a movie theatre by describing: Use Repetition Wisely Repetition of phrases throughout a paragraph, and repetition of sentences throughout your speech make your speech memorable. Wrap your speech around a signature phrase. However, I recommend against choosing this type of topic. Well, here then I go with my P4 Speech: It was a nightmarish nightmare. Desiring to see Anushka Sharma in my dreams and dreadingly getting ToonToon instead. I was dejected, disgusted, and devastated. I had fallen short and failed, no matter how fervently I tried. Dear Toastmasters and Guests, the fact is I am a 3-speech toastmaster. I was, I am, and I will be a 3-speech toastmaster! I could even bear a day fast, but not this tormenting truth! It was tough to take terms with the reality! All the fun and frolic in my life faded away. The otherwise-evergreen factors in my life – enjoyment, excitement, entertainment – their existence evaporated. I no longer could enjoy pan-fried noodles at mainland china – the tempting tasty thing I love more than my life. My days were as miserable as days in office when the vending machine was out-of-order! In the menu cards of restaurants I kept searching for words to use in my speech. Well, you might want to know what I did to overcome this problem. Ask me what not I did! It felt like Schwag, hitting fours and sixes in the first over, and then getting out cheaply at gully in the second! So, I started watching for words when my friends spoke to me. I searched for ideas in every nook and corner of my world. I started looking for one-liners and anecdotes in the hoardings instead of enjoying a Priyanka Chopra or a Kareena Kapoor picture! Newspapers, magazines, movies, and even horrible TV reality shows – I desperately searched everywhere for inspiration – in vain! I can only take heart to say that this horrendous truth is a humbling experience. But this humbling experience gave me the courage to speak out my feelings as a speech. At the end of the day, your thoughts are going to be your idea and content of your speech and your feelings are going to make the speech. Open your heart and march. On the face of this earth, I will have to wait for few more minutes to know whether I jumped the fourth hurdle to the race to become a competent toastmaster. This Speech was very well appreciated at the IBC building, resulting in 15 IM requests congratulating me within half an hour of completion of the session.

What is your general purpose? There are three basic types of speeches: Speeches that Educate e. This decision will influence many decisions you make as you prepare for your speech, so it is important that you are clear on your overall motive. Your core message is the central idea of your presentation. All other speech elements should support the core message. Aim to express your core message in a single sentence. If you cannot do this, you need more clarity. Your core message must be something you believe in. What do you know about this core message? Can you draw stories from personal experience? Have you researched the topic? We like to believe that our entire presentation will be remembered. The reality is that the audience will retain only one or two points. Your speech should be designed to ensure that your audience remembers your core message. How is this message related to the audience? Your audience is not an innocent bystander who just happens to be in the room when you deliver your presentation. They are an integral part of the communication path. Great delivery by a speaker does not guarantee a successful speech; a successful speech is one where the audience receives the message. Audience analysis is needed to determine which messages the audience is willing to receive from you: What are the key audience demographic? Are they technical or non-technical? Predominantly male or female? How is your audience related to you? Is the audience filled with your peers? Are you an outsider? Are you viewed as an expert? Are you unknown to them? How large is the audience? Is it small enough so that everyone will see sweat on your brow? Are you in a large theatre? Is the audience in the room, or is there a remote audience too? Or a future video audience? What message does the audience want to receive? This is just as important as asking what core message you want to deliver. They will tune out. Your delivery will be flat. If you attempt to speak on a topic where you have no expertise or experience to draw from, your presentation will fail. Your content will be empty and shallow. However, if you find a topic where you have both expertise and passion, and the audience is interested, you will succeed. What is the scope of your presentation? The scope is naturally influenced by elements discussed earlier: Your general purpose The needs of your audience There is one further key element to consider: How much time is allowed? If you have two minutes, then the scope of your talk is probably going to be one story illustrating that message. On the other hand, if you have four hours, then you may study biographical details of famous dreamers, discuss methods for aligning your life decisions with your dreams, or explore other avenues. What is the context of your presentation? There are dozens of factors that come into play which only you can know, but one of the most common is knowing whether or not others will be speaking at the same event on similar topics. If so, then your scope will generally be very narrow and perhaps quite deep. If you are a keynote speaker and nobody else has touched on your domain, then you may choose to a broader, more shallow scope. The genesis for this speech was a party conversation four months before the speech was written or delivered. Everyone was animated about the devastating impact of the recent wind storms on trees throughout the area. My friend relayed the theory of arborists as to why so many trees were knocked over in the storm. I was fascinated by the theory, and thought that I might someday craft a speech around that core idea. Months later, with a speech contest on the horizon, I was searching for a speech topic. I connected the determination of his parents with the theory of the fallen trees, and I felt that I had a core message: Face your problems head on! Once I had that central idea, I questioned whether it would work for the contest speech: The only common characteristic of the audience is that they all live in British Columbia where the storm was a massive news story a few months prior. This common experience was an advantage since the audience already had vivid mental images of the storm and the trees. The context was the Toastmasters International speech contest. Any topic is allowed, but inspirational or motivational topics are most common. I had what I felt was a meaty topic; my general purpose was to motivate my audience. Not only was the core message not fluffy, but it has universal appeal. Everyone in the audience has problems, so everyone in the audience should be interested in the message. I believe in the core message, and I have personal experiences from which to draw speech content. The timing was approximately seven minutes. I judged this would be more than adequate to tell a few stories about trees, the storm, and baby Maximus, and to tie it all together.

Among other cherished values, the First Amendment protects freedom of speech. Supreme Court often has struggled to determine what exactly constitutes protected speech. The following are examples of speech, both direct words and symbolic actions, that the Court has decided are either entitled to First Amendment protections, or not. The First Amendment states, in relevant part, that: Not to speak specifically, the right not to salute the flag. West Virginia Board of Education v. Des Moines, U. To use certain offensive words and phrases to convey political messages. To contribute money under certain circumstances to political campaigns. To advertise commercial products and professional services with some restrictions. Virginia Board of Pharmacy v. Virginia Consumer Council, U. State Bar of Arizona, U. To engage in symbolic speech, e. Freedom of speech does not include the right: To incite actions that would harm others e. United States, U. To make or distribute obscene materials.
