Jennifer Hamerman – August 18, Getting to know Paris through books Maybe your family lives in Paris and you want to give your kids a sense of their city through some beautiful fiction? Or perhaps you are looking for a gift for a child visiting Paris for the first time? An elderly lady, rather set in her ways, lives right next to the Eiffel Tower and yet has never been up it, dismissing it as a waste of time, just for tourists. A new friendship with a little dog called Max leads her reluctantly up the tower and she discovers the magic of seeing her city from above. A beautiful and funny tale with a serious message about being open to new experiences and friendships. And possibly a few gentle digs at Parisian closed-mindedness for the grown-ups. The book is based on beautiful photographs of the city. The story behind the book is just as charming. Dollmaker Jess Brown is given equal billing in the credits as the creator of Coco, the doll used in the book. Kids love the sense of adventure the girl and her doll share and parents love the creative photos. The text is charming as we join a little girl and her grandfather as they explore the city. The illustrations are beautiful and detailed, with plenty to talk about. My daughter knows the city geography well enough to piece their journey together as they walk, but it would work equally well for a newcomer and could even serve as a guide. We like the smaller print details with facts about the city. You could skip those with a younger child. My favourite page involves the Tuleries metro stop simply because my eagle-eyed then six year-old gleefully told me: She knew the Paris metro system well enough to know that Tuileries is on the number 1 Metro line and she saw the artist has drawn a driver on the metro train. I was sort of delighted. This kid has the makings of a real Parisienne. Or a future job at RATP transport. Either way, this is a terrific book for both locals and visitors. The illustrations are stunning as we follow the lion around Paris, where the residents barely give him a second glance. Its a great conversation-starter with your kids about being new in a foreign city and city life in general. The detailed illustrations take the reader on a captivating tour of Paris. Its great fun to pour over the replica Baedeker tourist map together at the back of the book too. Emma in Paris This book is a delight. Its based on a wonderful idea that all around our feet, the streets of Paris host another, parallel city of animal life. Or that the animals have their own buskers to entertain them? After the death of its owner, a cat takes a tour around France, from Rouen to St Tropez. You can taste and smell France as he traverses the country to make his way back to his old home. Harry and Lulu Lulu is desperate for a dog. Imagine her disappointment when her parents give her not a real dog but just a stuffed toy, Harry. But wait, it turns out Harry is not only real, but he comes from France and he whisks Lulu away to visit his home city! The Giraffe that Walked to Paris This is a captivating and true tale about the first giraffe ever to live in Europe! Unsurprisingly she was greeted with a fabulous royal parade on her arrival in Paris. In Babar Loses his Crown by Laurent de Brunhoff, the poor old elephant king is on a trip to Paris with his family when his crown gets lost in a luggage mix-up. So we get taken on a tour of Paris as the family searches for the crown. A great Paris tale for younger kids. Generations have been reading these books since they were first published in and with good reason. She is a little girl with spirit and the art work is timeless. Every family gets hooked on the rhythms of the lines that begin: The artwork is fun and engaging and the words are lilting and addictive. A book that will prove to your kids that Paris is very much for them. By day Snowy Snow is at the zoo but by night she takes a stroll through Paris, discovering the sites and the places that she thinks children will love. Written in a poetry format accompanied by beautiful illustrations, this short tale takes the reader on a journey throughout the city as well as getting to know the main character Snowy Snow. This book was released in May But we will only get to keep them if we keep making at least some of our purchases there. So sure, click on Amazon for some books but make a point of getting at least some in person at the bookstore. Use it or lose it! And let me know which books you love! When she goes to school, she helps the other kids get glam, too. Until they need to unglam and play! A crab is too cranky. A pig, too muddy. An elephant, too big. But when he goes to the pet shop, he meets a parrot who poops on him and creates a ruckus – in other words, the perfect pirate pet. Dynamic illustrations and a rollicking adventure will make this a new favorite. But the Guardians surprise her. She can do what she loves and is good at. She took ribbons, things to eat, shoes, and a doll. But what would you take? The students each make lists of what he or she would take, things like a punk-rock Barbie, ukulele, karate gi, and Legos. The last pages ask YOU to think of what you would take and includes a pop up suitcase. I love the interactivity and connection to personal histories. Phil is sick of Shadow following him everywhere and doing his own things. Phil loves scary movies. Phil likes to be punctual. Shadow stops and smells the roses instead. Finally Phil gets mad and pushes Shadow to leave. Will they find each other again in the great big world? Henry and Leo by Pamela Zagarenski After a family day in the woods, Henry accidentally leaves behind his best friend, his stuffed lion named Leo. In a series of magical, evocative pages, the forest animals come together to return Leo to Henry. I personally am partial to superheroes like the choices in this girl power book. Each person featured gets a full page, colorful eye-popping spread as well as written information about who she is and what she does. Twenty Yawns by Jane Smiley, illustrated by Lauren Castillo diversity Lucy yawns while her mother reads her a bedtime story and drifts off to sleep. As she makes her way back to bed with Molasses and her friends, readers will help count her yawns. Can you count all twenty? The Hanger poem is shaped like a hanger, Dominoes are shaped just like falling dominoes with fun texts about pushing single file down the row. I love the Corners poem about a hungry mouse looking for cheese that is shaped like a maze.
