In part, it was a revolt against social and political norms of the Age of Enlightenment and a reaction against the scientific rationalization of nature. In the first of these essays Hoffmann traced the beginnings of musical Romanticism to the later works of Haydn and Mozart. It was also through the writings of Hoffmann and other German authors that German music was brought to the centre of musical Romanticism. Characteristics often attributed to Romanticism: Such lists, however, proliferated over time, resulting in a "chaos of antithetical phenomena", criticized for their superficiality and for signifying so many different things that there came to be no central meaning. The attributes have also been criticized for being too vague. In music there is a relatively clear dividing line in musical structure and form following the death of Beethoven. Schumann, Schubert, Berlioz and other early-Romantic composers tended to look in alternative directions. Some characteristics of Romantic music include: The use of new or previously not so common musical structures like the song cycle, nocturne, concert etude, arabesque and rhapsody, alongside the traditional classical genres. Programme music became somewhat more common; A harmonic structure based on movement from tonic to subdominant or alternative keys rather than the traditional dominant, and use of more elaborate harmonic progressions. Wagner and Liszt are known for their experimental progressions; A greater emphasis on melody to sustain musical interest. The classical period often used short, even fragmentary, thematic material while the Romantic period tended to make greater use of longer, more fully defined and more satisfying themes; The use of a wider range of dynamics, for example from ppp to fff, supported by large orchestration; Using a larger tonal range. For example, the Industrial Revolution was in full effect by the late 18th century and early 19th century. This event had a profound effect on music: The new and innovative instruments could be played with greater ease and they were more reliable. Schmidt-Jones and Jones, 3. Another development that had an effect on music was the rise of the middle class. Composers before this period lived on the patronage of the aristocracy. Many times their audience was small, composed mostly of the upper class and individuals who were knowledgeable about music. Schmidt-Jones and Jones, 3. The Romantic composers, on the other hand, often wrote for public concerts and festivals, with large audiences of paying customers, who had not necessarily had any music lessons. Schmidt-Jones and Jones, 3. Composers of the Romantic Era, like Elgar, showed the world that there should be "no segregation of musical tastes" Young, and that the "purpose was to write music that was to be heard" Young. Musical nationalism During the Romantic period, music often took on a much more nationalistic purpose. The folk idiom is prominent in the Mazurkas of Chopin. Machlis, "His mazurkas and polonaises are particularly notable for their use of nationalistic rhythms. Smetana also composed eight nationalist operas, all of which remain in the repertory.
