By the first of these passions, she was never so far governed as to become a Messalina , but she often disgraced both her rank and sex: A common story claims that she died as a result of her voracious sexual appetite while attempting sexual intercourse with a stallion – the story holds that the harness holding the horse above her broke, and she was crushed. But it most likely began due to unfounded bawdy tales. The fact that this particular vulgar tale did not even emerge until several decades after her death, and that the legend has no clear source, should make it clear that this is no more than an urban legend that inexplicably gained popularity. Another story claiming that she died on the toilet when her seat broke under her [ citation needed ] is true only in small part: This tale was widely circulated and even jokingly referred to by Aleksandr Pushkin in one of his untitled poems. According to said urban legend; the furniture was highly eccentric with tables that had large penises for legs. Penises and vulvas were carved out on the furniture, the walls were covered in erotic art, statues of a naked man and woman inside, and some versions of the legend state that some erotic artifacts from Pompeii were even brought into Russia to augment this collection. There are unconfirmed reports of photographs of this cabinet. The rooms and the furniture were allegedly seen in by two Wehrmacht officers during the Nazi Invasion of The Soviet Union , but even if that were true, the rooms and furniture seem to have vanished since then. This account is "dodgy" , "sketchy" , and "dubious" at the very best. The account says the Wehrmacht officers filed a report, and no report has ever been found, nor are any other records from anyone from before, during, or after the Second World War; other than the aforementioned legend. Also, the account says the rooms and furniture were seen in , during the Nazi Invasion of The Soviet Union, but the invasion of The Soviet Union by Nazi Germany did not start in , but on June 22nd, So this little anecdote has a few holes in it. However, investigators are looking into the possibility of locating these lost rooms with black lights. Other narratives [ edit ] A long-surviving story about the Potemkin villages was false, even though it became eponymous. It states that Potemkin built fake settlements with hollow facades to fool Empress Catherine II during her visit to Crimea and New Russia , the territories Russia conquered under her reign. The letter Ñ‘ was not widely accepted until the s. They sent a petition to Catherine asking her to prohibit the construction of high minarets. As the legend goes, Catherine replied that she was the tsarina of the Russian land and that the sky was beyond her jurisdiction. , in Russian, M. Catherine I, Anne and Elizabeth of Russia. The Russians can carve wood like no one else. They have been carving wood for at least two millennium. The mediaeval Russian wooden churches built with just axes are legendary. They have been crafted entirely by hand. Since each chair is handmade there are slight variations in all the parts. Entering their workshops was to step back in time. Every inch of space was filled with models, fragments of broken Imperial furniture, wood, tools. Chairs made in These guys were a Russian national treasure - they had been trained in the old, pre-revolutionary techniques of furniture making. During the Soviet period the system employed these people with their obscure skills. After the Second World War they were called upon to restore the palaces that had been damaged by the German during that conflict. Our carvers were the third generation since the revolution and they had been trained by their fathers and grandfathers. I had been working with these craftspeople since In we decided to palace a big order to sell both online and through our Dallas showroom. Side view of the Winged Sphinx Chairs - from an original at Pavlovsk. It was very difficult to work with the Russians on this order. Being craftspeople "really artists" under the Soviet system they had never had to worry about work schedules or where their next paycheck would come from. We could not get anything produced on time. Each chair took months to carve. After it was completed we would finish them and gild the chairs. No one in the world does gilding like the Russians. In the Soviet period the country produced its own gold and there was lots of it to spare. The state provided the Romanov palaces with oceans of gold for the restoration of their gilded baroque carvings and furniture. The Russians generally do oil gilding "not water gilding. On furniture water gilding is impractical, it is easily damaged and hard to repair. You can put on multiple layers of gold on a piece of furniture with oil gilding. If you make a mistake it is simple to repair it. Items that are water gilded are less susceptible to wear. Anyway, we were unable to produce many of the pieces we wanted. We also made copies of the famous Sphinx chairs from the study of the same palace. All were incredible works of art, but you never knew how long you would have to wait. Front view of the chair - please ignore the horrible fabric! This is how the Chinese shipped the first order to us. We replaced it with French tapestry. The original chair was covered in Beauvais tapestry fragments of a dog and flowers. Despite the prices we had to charge, there were many orders for the chairs. Regretfully, with the supply of the chairs so uncertain we were unable to accept these orders and halted production in Russia. Last year we decided to make the chairs again and ordered models from one of our suppliers in China. At first they had a difficult time reproducing the Russian Imperial "Empire" style. On the first two attempts the heads did not look European and the Chinese craftsmen could not duplicate the delicacy of the carving in the wings. We had our best sculptor-modeler come in he is a brilliant copier of neoclassical, Roman and Greek styles and he made clay models of the various parts of the chairs. The woodcarvers then made exact replicas of his work. First attempt of the Chinese carvers to duplicate the faces of the Winged Sphinxes. In some respects they were better than the Russians had done. We made a few changes to the original design by the Russian architect Voronikhin. First we made the chairs for modern body sizes. They were too small and unusable. So, we made the new Sphinx chairs oversized, so you can really use them and sit on them. It is amazing how comfortable they are. The Russians carved them from linden wood. Our new chairs are much stronger and massive. The special model in clay created by our master neoclassical sculptor. Another change has been the ornament in the top panel. We could not find a good photograph of the curved top so we replaced the interlaced wreathes on the original with a design on a similar chair from the Hermitage Museum. Lastly we used a different color. Voronikhin had intended the chairs to look like they were made from green patinated bronze with gilding. The green color had darkened to black on the original chair so we made them black and gold. The result is rich and beautiful. Our Chinese factory is very fast. They can complete any order up to 12 chairs in six weeks. The quality of the chairs is amazing. It is essential to order all the chairs you want at one time, as there can be a variation in each order. You can ship them less expensively by surface transport, but this can take up to six weeks or more. If you
