Attorney s appearing for the Case William C. Upon suit by the trustee in bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court for the Western District of North Carolina found a conveyance of property from a debtor to his wife, in exchange for the release of marital rights of support and inheritance, to be fraudulent and voidable under 11 U. I After being married for more than thirty years, Jerald and Irma Snyder entered into a separation agreement whereby Jerald would transfer to Irma his half-interest in their residence in exchange for her release of any claims against him for support, alimony, or inheritance. Thereafter, the Snyders have lived separately, although they have never been divorced. On October 10, , Jerald Snyder filed a voluntary petition for bankruptcy pursuant to 11 U. The trustee in bankruptcy then instituted suit in the bankruptcy court for the Western District of North Carolina, seeking pursuant to 11 U. A jury to whom the issue was submitted by the bankruptcy judge found as fact that Jerald Snyder "became insolvent" as a result of the transfer. Irma Snyder then brought this appeal, challenging the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, the legal ruling that she had not given her husband "reasonably equivalent value," and the jury finding of insolvency. We address these contentions seriatim. Marathon Pipe Line Co. If this argument were to prevail, the effect would be to nullify the entire course of proceedings to date, necessitating remand to the district court for reconsideration of both the legal and factual issues decided by the bankruptcy court. Because of the prospective-only effect of the Northern Pipeline decision, the argument must fail. In holding unconstitutional the allocation in the Bankruptcy Reform Act of the Act of judicial powers to bankruptcy judges, the Northern Pipeline Court stayed entry of its judgment until December 24, , 1 to "afford Congress an opportunity to reconstitute the bankruptcy courts or to adopt other valid means of adjudication, without impairing the interim administration of the bankruptcy laws. This must mean more than merely that, after December 24, exercise of the judicial powers conferred upon bankruptcy judges by the Act would be unconstitutional. It must signify as well that decisions rendered by bankruptcy courts under the Act and before the effective date of the judgment in Northern Pipeline are presumptively valid as a constitutional exercise of congressionally conferred judicial authority. The district court drew "a distinction between cases where there is a divorce or court order and the cases where there is only an agreement between husband and wife," reasoning that "value" within the statutory meaning required in this circumstance a release of court-mandated alimony or support payments. Under this view, the conveyance between the Snyders was voidable because Jerald was under no judicial compulsion at the time of transfer to make payments to his wife, so that her release of rights to support and inheritance did not satisfy a "present or antecedent debt. In re Chappel, F. To determine whether there existed such an obligation of support, we look to North Carolina law. This duty is enforceable in a variety of ways: It is a duty considered to be so fraught with a public interest that any contractual undertaking between a husband and wife living together and not contemplating imminent separation which purports to quantify or limit the duty is, under North Carolina law, void as against public policy. To be valid such an agreement must 1 be made between spouses either actually separated or intending immediately to separate, 2 R. Applying these principles to the matter at hand, it would appear on the face of the record on appeal that the Snyders may indeed have entered into a valid, enforceable separation agreement the effect of which under state law could be the satisfaction of a present obligation of support owed by the bankrupt to his wife. This must therefore be considered an open question for resolution upon remand. Accordingly, we affirm this portion of the proceedings. V The jury finding that the bankrupt became insolvent as a result of the transfer at issue is affirmed. In all other respects, we vacate the judgment and remand the case to the district court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. We note that further proceedings must be in conformity with the Interim Bankruptcy Rules now in effect, see 51 U. The judgment was first stayed to October 4, , see Northern Pipeline, S. Though not to the extent of any "inheritance rights" also included among the interests released by the wife. Although the parties have not directly addressed the point, it is apparent that questions concerning the marital rights and duties of North Carolina domiciliaries" and any attempted modification of the marital status by an agreement executed in North Carolina" will be governed by North Carolina law. See also Butner v. United States, U. The district court observed that "the debtor and his wife Consideration of equivalence in value for this purpose should be limited to the value of the support rights and should not run to any separate value that might be assigned putative "inheritance rights" also stated to be among the interests released. See supra note 2. State law principles providing that a court will not inquire into the exchange of values in a separation agreement absent fraud or a total failure of consideration, see Van Every v. Van Every, N.
