The Sac and Fox culture is based upon respect for the life within themselves, their families, their communities, and all of creation. The Creator gave this way of life to the Sac and Fox people. The culture is the way things are done in relation to each other and all of creation.

Despite the many hardships that they have faced over the years, which included losing the majority of their land and people, they have remained a viable group who are proud of their ancestors and heritage. The Sac and Fox people lived in bark houses in small villages. The Sac social organization consisted of clans: Bear, Sturgeon, Thunder and Wolf. The Sac and Fox of the Missouri band were finally settled to the northeast corner of Kansas. At this time it included approximately 4, Sac and Fox people. The Treaty of ceded all this land to the government and ultimately started the Black Hawk War in Black Hawk did not believe this treaty was valid and vowed not to give in to the government. His autobiography was published in Black Hawk said, "How smooth must be the languages of the whites. When they can make right look like wrong and wrong like right. Keokuk was buried in Kansas, but his body was later take back to Keokuk, Iowa, where the city still honors his name. Mokohoko was a leader when the removal of the Sac and Foxes from Kansas took place in Mokohoko and some followers refused to go to Oklahoma. There are three bands of Sac and Fox, and they all have their own distinct government and enrollment processes. They are federally recognized: The Sauk and Fox were originally two distinct groups. During the s, a French attack on the Foxes caused the two tribes to join forces and form a close alliance which helped to affect unification. The Treaty of officially named the Sac and Fox Nation of Missouri as a distinct tribe, and they were removed to northeast Missouri from Iowa and Illinois. The Nation has a Museum located in Reserve, Kansas which has displays of artifacts, pictures and more history.

The Sac and Fox Nation, (Mesquakie language: Thakiwaki or Sa ki wa ki) is the largest of three federally recognized tribes of Sauk and Meskwaki (Fox) Native American peoples.

Through a series of dislocations they found themselves in the Indian Territory now Oklahoma in the s. Although they were historically associated and closely related by language and culture, the two peoples have always remained geographically and politically distinct. The Meskwaki have resided on the Meskwaki Settlement in central Iowa since , and the Thakiwaki have been in central Oklahoma since the s. The contemporary Sac and Fox population in Oklahoma claim to be predominantly of Thakiwaki decent and typically refer to themselves as both "Sac and Fox" and Sauk, and to their heritage language as Sauk. During their residence in present Illinois the Thakiwaki principally lived in a settlement near Rock Island, situated a short distance above the confluence of the Mississippi and Rock rivers. The most notable armed conflict involving the Thakiwaki is perhaps the three-month lack Hawk War of That conflict occurred shortly after their removal, according to treaty agreement, from Saukenuk to Iowa. It entailed an extended series of skirmishes between United States infantrymen and a dissident band of one thousand that included five hundred warriors led by Black Hawk. Although Black Hawk survived, the event itself ended tragically with the slaughter of unarmed Thakiwaki crossing the Mississippi River. Afterward, only to of the original thousand dissidents rejoined their compliant counterparts on the Iowa side of the river. Some Thakiwaki call the Black Hawk War a historical example of an enduring spirit of resistance. The war, however, has also been viewed as a watershed, signifying the last armed resistance to Euroamerican encroachment and resettlement east of the Mississippi River. A contemporary of Black Hawk, Keokuk provides an important contrast. An effective orator and diplomat, Keokuk desired to negotiate and maintain peaceful relations with what he perceived to be an ever growing and expanding Euroamerican population. These historical embodiments, one of resistance and autonomy and another of peace and diplomacy, represent a continuing dynamic in Thakiwaki political life. These memberships have served significant functions in the continued practice of cultural observances, including adoption, naming, and burial ceremonies, a seasonal cycle of clan feasts, and various dances. Members have also been involved in the religious practices of the Drum Society, the Native American Church, and Christianity. Although the state of Oklahoma fought the practice, on May 17, , the U. The Thakiwaki now call May 17 "Victory Day. Leadership lies with an elected body of five officials: Elections are held in August on odd-numbered years, and each official serves a four-year term. In , Congress passed the Dawes Act which broke up the reservation and allotted land to the tribal members. The tribe imposes a tax on earnings of any person working within tribal jurisdiction, regardless of whether that person is a tribal member. The tribe also provides for a motor vehicle tax and registration of any vehicle that are owned by a tribal member and garaged within tribal jurisdiction. The State of Oklahoma, through the Oklahoma Tax Commission , also administers income [9] and motor vehicle taxes. Oklahoma contends that anyone within the state had to register their vehicles with the state, while the Sac and Fox Nation required tribal members residing in tribal jurisdiction to register the vehicle with the tribe. The state viewed those members to be delinquent in their vehicle taxes, but made no effort to collect until the vehicle was sold to a new owner. At that time, Oklahoma would require that the delinquent taxes and penalties be paid in order to register the vehicle. Both the Sac and Fox Nation and Oklahoma made motions for summary judgment and the district court, without determining reservation boundaries, held that while the state could collect income tax on non-tribal members, they could not collect income taxes from tribal members employed by the tribe on trust land. The district court also held that the state could not collect vehicle taxes for periods that the vehicle was properly registered with the tribe. Both sides appealed to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals. First the court noted that the reservation boundaries were not relevant to the case, the issue instead being tribal immunity from state jurisdiction. The court noted the prior Supreme Court decision in Okla. The appellate court was not persuaded and ruled that the state could impose an income tax on non-tribal members. The court held that the tribe could require the registration of vehicles on tribal land, regardless of whether the owner was a tribal member or not. The court noted that both Moe v. Salish and Kootenai Tribes [16] and Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation [17] prohibit such state taxation on tribal members. The state could enforce its vehicle tax on non-tribal members. William Rice argued the case for the Sac and Fox Nation. The state also argued that the vehicle tax and registration fees were more akin to a sales tax and a use fee than an excise tax. All that is required is that the member live in "Indian country", [20] [21] which Congress has defined to "include formal and informal reservations, dependent Indian communities, and Indian allotments, whether restricted or held in trust by the United States. She stated that the tax strongly resembled the taxes prohibited by Colville and Moe, and noted that if the registration fee was a use fee, then non-residents of Oklahoma would not be exempt. The court upheld the decision of the Tenth Circuit Court. Chickasaw Nation , [29] have become known as the "Oklahoma tax cases".
