In the early stages of his career during the s he made all kinds of movies. He had always made some westerns, but by the late s, like Randolph Scott he began to concentrate almost entirely on the genre. His quiet demeanor projected a basic decency, even when he was playing an outlaw Four Faces West , Colorado Territory. Neither he nor Scott worked with the very greatest directors of westerns of their time until very late in their careers, but McCrea did have a productive relationship with director Jacques Tourneur Stars in My Crown , Stranger on Horseback, Wichita. McCrea had his own ranch, and he always described himself in his tax returns as a rancher. He and Scott were among the very best riders in westerns, and he always looked like he knew what he was doing on a horse. Watch him in Colorado Territory and Gunsight Ridge , for example. By the late s, he had decided to concentrate almost exclusively on westerns, much like Joel McCrea. With his courtly North Carolina accent, his riding ability, his weathered good looks as he aged and his ability to project stern rectitude, Scott just needed the right team to work with and was lucky enough to find it in the last seven years or so of his career. In the s and Ride the High Country , look for him wearing his trademark worn leather jacket, often riding his beautiful dark palomino horse Stardust, who always went uncredited. But of his four westerns, three of them are on the list of 55 Great Westerns and the fourth Wyatt Earp is a notable addition to the impressive list of westerns telling the Wyatt Earp story. Like Robert Duvall, he has both been lucky and has chosen well when selecting his movie roles in westerns. Costner has always connected well with the western sensibility. His first large-scale film role was as the scapegrace younger brother Jake in Silverado , adept with two guns, physically restless and gymnastic but impulsive. He next showed up as both director and principal actor in Dances With Wolves , with its extraordinarily long running time. This was the first western in more than 60 years to win the Best Picture Oscar. He went on to work with Lawrence Kasdan again in the interesting but not-entirely-successful Wyatt Earp , and finally to direct himself and Robert Duvall in Open Range. In fact there are those who would say that many of his films are westerns regardless of their supposed settings: Prince of Thieves, with his abominably American accent in the title role. On the down side of his career now, he may not make more westerns, but he has been extraordinarily successful in those he did make. Owen Thursday in Fort Apache. In the first half of his career, he worked with some great directors: After the excellent Warlock , his career in westerns went into a long, slow fade, although he was usually worth watching. After that, he took what he was offered, including the occasional spaghetti western, but the era of great westerns was fading along with his career. Upon his return, he made his mark with several movies in the new film noir genre see especially Gilda [], for one classic example. But he also moved back into westerns The Man from Colorado , Lust for Gold , showing that he was not afraid to play against his generally wholesome image. Indeed, in one of his very best westerns the original 3: Some of his best work during this middle period of his career was done with the excellent director Delmer Daves 3: He fought Barbara Stanwyck, Edward G. If given a choice, through the s and s, he always wore the same beat-up hat, which was looking pretty disgusting by the early s. To continue the list, see Shooting Stars, Part 3.

Fight for the school we love so dearly. Fight for the Scarlet and Black. And the Victory Bells will ring out. The tradition began in when President Knapp dedicated the day. The first Arbor Day was hosted by the Saddle Tramps, students and faculty planted 20, trees. The event begins with the Texas Tech University Combined Choirs singing classic holiday songs at the Science Quadrangle and the Saddle Tramps carrying torches to light the way. This is followed by the lighting ceremony, where students and others witness the illuminating of the over 25, red, white, and orange lights decorating the 13 buildings surrounding Memorial Circle. The tradition traces its beginnings to when Harold Hinn designed the plan and provided the funding to cover the Science Quadrangle and Administration building with lights. However, students were away on Christmas break and did not see the display. It began in at a game where the football lost, 20â€™6, to Hardinâ€™Simmons. During the annual celebration, Tech-exes and fans join with students for a bonfire, built by the Saddle Tramps, and pep rally, parade, open houses, awards programs, and float competitions. A highlight of the event is election of a queen, the first being Suzanne Matteson in A typical event draws nearly 10, students. Live music acts play on stage as students and guests barbecue, socialize, and participate in games hosted by various student organizations. For the football season, Head Coach, Kliff Kingsbury discontinued the raider walk. Founded in , it is the oldest student organization on campus. During that year, while Texas Tech was very young and establishing its identity, a group of students Arch Lamb, Paul "Grandma" Bowers and Bud Thompson observed that the school spirit was being channeled in the wrong direction. The student body was overly exuberant and unorganized. Lamb conceived the idea of an organization that would lead this enthusiastic spirit into constructive channels. It was decided that Saddle Tramps should be a non-political organization dedicated to the improvement and advancement of Texas Tech as well as service and leadership to the university and student body. Early Texas ranchers would hire a "saddle tramp" on the basis of his ability and willingness to tackle any task assigned to him. He would move on after some time, having done all he could to contribute to the improvement of the ranch. It was from this idea that Lamb named the group as he did. The first men selected were the top ones in each college of the university. Each of these men chose others who he thought would make the best members. The projects of Saddle Tramps have included such things as rallying freshmen at athletic events, supervising the planting of 20, trees on campus in and raising money to buy the first forty band uniforms. They played a major role in obtaining the fountain and seal, which is located at the Broadway Street entrance to campus. The statue is also wrapped in black crepe paper to mourn national tragedies. Saddle Tramps also construct the Homecoming bonfire and conduct a torchlight parade at the beginning of the bonfire as well as the Carol of Lights. During the tenure, the identity of the person playing Raider Red is unknown to everyone but the Saddle Tramps. Prospective members receive a bid after attending rush week at the beginning of each semester. Membership is limited to actives and pledges. It is also necessary for him to know the history of the Saddle Tramp organization in order to help him better understand the purpose of the organization and his duties as a Saddle Tramp. The High Riders take part in parades and campus events throughout the year to endorse the Lady Raiders. They also hold the distinction of being the only people, along with the Saddle Tramps, allowed in the bell tower of the Administration Building to ring the Victory bells after each Lady Raider home victory. She decided that, with better planning, she could create a lasting group to fill the gap. On February 2, , the High Riders were accepted as an official campus organization. They began work immediately and, the following fall, 75 undergraduates attended rush parties. Twenty-five were chosen to be members of the first pledge class. They pledged through January and were initiated on February 4. They had to support themselves by way of bake sales, selling dorm room carpet, and selling programs at Lady Raiders sporting events. In time, the High Riders expanded and played an even greater role by helping the Lady Raiders with airport transportation, game management, and giving recruits campus tours.
