He has sat on and chaired numerous search committees for both faculty and administrative hires. He sees the enormous stack of applicants for each open position, but insists that there are certain methods for distinguishing yourself from the crowd. I realize that I am fortunate to follow this horrendous academic job market from the other side of the desk. With that said, in every search, I see scores of applicants make simple mistakes that sink their candidacy. Here are some common-sense tips when applying to a Christian University. Remember, the faculty and administration at my type of institution see themselves quite differently. My advice applies specifically for member schools of the Council for Christian Colleges and Universities CCCU , but it is also may be helpful for any institution with some religious affiliation. For example, if you applying to any of the Methodist related institutions, such as Greenville College, then you should be able to speak to Wesleyan theology and its influence on your own career trajectory. If you are applying to a Jesuit institution such as Santa Clara University, explain why you would want to work there if you are not Jesuit. Did you go to a Mennonite high school or were you deeply influenced by the writing of Yoder? Then you should inform the search committee of Eastern Mennonite University. Just a couple of sentences can demonstrate that you have some familiarity with the religious culture of the institution. Of course, you need to research and get a feel for the way this is played out. But obviously, the Quaker influence will be much more pronounced on the latter school. Be sure to demonstrate how faith informs your field. If you are a sociologist, you may want to explain how faith compels you to develop your research regarding income discrepancies along racial categories. If you are a biologist, you could speak to the wonder of creation that nurtured a love for all living things. Be sure to speak to tangible ways that this integration of faith and learning influences your teaching. A Hiring Committee is Not a Dissertation Committee If you are coming from a top tier PhD program, remember that these schools want to be academically respectable and generally speaking, I believe that they are , but that also have other mandated missions, particularly service to society and communities of faith. But if you finished your PhD at Harvard, remember that you do not need to prove that you are smart. Instead, you need to prove that your heart matches the institutional mission, which may involve an outreach beyond the academe. But if you cannot do authentically, then you will be absolutely miserable at a school like mine. I have trained numerous Ph.

Introduction The University encourages employees to continue to pursue educational goals and interests. To assist, the University offers three tuition assistance plans: These plans have differing benefits and requirements as defined below. Tuition Remission Plan A. The value of this employee benefit is tax free. Regular full-time and regular part-time staff and faculty employees as defined in the Employment Status Policy , as well as their current spouses and dependent children, become eligible for undergraduate tuition remission benefits the first semester which begins after their hire date. The semester start date shall be the first day of undergraduate classes according to the academic calendar. If an employee leaves the University with less than one year of service for reasons other than mutual agreement, the employee will be responsible for paying the University the full amount of tuition charges incurred since their hire date for themselves, their spouse, or children. Spouses and Dependent Children The University will remit the full tuition for spouses and dependent children of eligible employees provided that the spouses or dependent children are enrolled in undergraduate degree programs at the University. An award of tuition remission under this policy supersedes any award of financial aid by the admissions office. Additional Requirements and Limitations Tuition remission benefits are available only for undergraduate education for spouses and dependent children. Tuition remission benefits are for enrollment in courses offered by The Catholic University of America and the other member institutions of the Consortium of Universities of Washington, D. Employees, their spouses and dependent children will be subject to the same enrollment limitations as all other students. When, therefore, registration for and attendance in such a course is necessary, the employee must have the prior approvals of both the immediate supervisor and the cognizant Vice President. Time taken from the normal working hours to attend such a course must be made up with a schedule subject to the same approvals. Staff members may not enroll in courses in a department or, in schools without departments, the school where they work. Individuals who retire from University employment may use tuition remission benefits for current spouses and dependent children with the limitation that the benefit will be extended only if the spouse and dependent children were eligible at the time the employee retired and only for undergraduate programs. Retirees and their spouses may audit courses without charge, subject to the permission of the instructor of each course. Surviving spouses and dependent children of deceased employees with ten or more years of service will retain their eligibility for enrollment in undergraduate programs only. Approval of tuition remission for a dependent child is contingent upon proof of dependent status. CUA reserves the right to request appropriate proof before approving any application for tuition remission for a dependent. Employees are required to provide proof of birth or adoption or the required information on dependent status of a stepchild with the first application for tuition remission for a dependent child. Special Note Regarding Overseas Study A number of educational programs can be enriched by participation in overseas study programs sponsored or approved by CUA. All expenses billed to CUA including the tuition, fees, room and board for the overseas study program will be the responsibility of the student. The University reserves the right to charge an administrative fee for overseas study if, in the discretion of the University, it is necessary. The CUA tuition is the only part of the cost of the overseas study program that is included in the tuition remission benefit. Awards are made for one academic year at a time. The requirements and limitations that apply to undergraduate tuition remission at the University also apply to tuition exchange. In such limited instances the University will submit the tuition exchange application for an eligible University dependent child for consideration by the respective school. It is permissible for a qualifying employee to apply for his or her dependent child for both tuition remission and tuition exchange benefits and the dependent child select one or the other once the results of his or her application process are available. That person will have eligibility for tuition assistance by virtue of their employment at CUA and is subject to the policy limitations for employees. Section Plan Whereas tuition remission benefits are available primarily for undergraduate education, the University adopted a Section Plan as a way to provide tax free tuition benefits to employees taking graduate courses. A sports coach, for example, would be able to exclude a course on that particular sport. Regular full-time and regular part-time employees as well as faculty members become eligible for the section tuition the semester following their hire date. Eligible employees who enroll in any of the schools of the University may receive tuition assistance for no more than the lesser of 2 courses per semester or 4 courses per academic year. Eligible employees enrolled in specific Metropolitan School of Professional Studies graduate programs are eligible to take six courses a year, two each semester, the summer session is considered one semester. This benefit is pro-rated for regular part-time employees. The amount of tuition assistance offered to part-time employees is pro-rated based on the number of hours the employee works. Temporary employees and part time employees who work fewer than 20 hours a week are not eligible for tuition assistance. Receipt of tuition assistance benefits is contingent upon continued employment for the entire semester or summer session for which tuition assistance was approved. If an employee receiving tuition assistance benefits terminates employment before the completion of a semester, for any reason other than retirement, reduction in force, or long term disability, tuition assistance benefits will be revoked and the employee will be responsible for paying the University the full amount of tuition charges for the semester. Also, if an employee with less than one year of service leaves employment for reasons other than mutual agreement, the employee will be responsible for paying the University the full amount of tuition charges incurred since their hire date. A tax-free tuition reduction is also available to a former employee who retired or left on disability. Employee tuition assistance benefits may not be combined with other University scholarship or University grant funds. Section Plan benefits do not cover fees, books, tools or supplies. University Authority The University reserves the right to amend or terminate any and all plans and programs discussed herein. The University reserves the right to interpret the terms and conditions of all said plans and programs and to make decisions regarding eligibility and benefits. If there shall be any dispute between the terms and conditions of this Policy and the terms and conditions of the plans, the terms and conditions of the plans shall prevail. Administration Applicants for tuition assistance benefits under this policy are responsible for contacting the Office of Human Resources tel.

Explain that you grew up in a Christian home. Mention something about your continued appreciation for those who are religious, even if you are agnostic. If I could recall his name, I would probably contact him to apologize profusely about raising his hopes with shoddy advice for a job that "given his profile" he would have never been offered anyway. Now a decade and more into life as a faculty member at a Quaker institution, I have a clearer sense of what it means to apply for a job such as mine. Being raised in a religious home does not automatically qualify someone for employment at a college similar to my own, nor does merely "honoring" or "appreciating" the values upon which the religious institution was founded. But institutions do indeed have this right legally, and academic freedom has its limitations in every institution, not just those founded on religious principles. For people interested in a job at a religious institution, though, my primary word of advice is similar to that for any job applicant to a faculty position: Learning a little something about that heritage is important, too, especially once you land a phone or on-campus interview. If you are applying to a Friends institution like mine, for example, this probably does not mean knowing about the schisms that split the 19th-century Quaker church, or memorizing church polity, or even recognizing the many diverse conferences to which Quakers belong. You may not even need to know that the Quaker Oatmeal logo has nothing to do with the Society of Friends" though understanding the difference will probably help. Because, of course, no two institutions, even within the same general religious tradition, will be the same. Applying to George Fox University will mean something far different than applying to Swarthmore or Bryn Mawr Colleges, even though those institutions also have Quaker roots. When you are applying to a religious institution, you might also want to investigate whether faculty members have to sign a faith statement, and whether you would feel comfortable doing so. Such faith statements differ vastly from institution to institution: A job applicant may need to interrogate herself about whether she could sign such a statement with integrity and walk away from those searches where the answer is "no," as painful as that might be in this very tight job market. Of course, there are institutions that only hire faculty from their own denominational heritages, or who put strict limitations on requirements for employment. In one dramatic instance, a former faculty member at George Fox terminated an on-campus interview at a famous East Coast evangelical college when the department chair demanded she return to her hotel room and change from slacks to a dress, the appropriate apparel for any female faculty member at the institution. As with any faculty position, the application and hiring process in religious institutions comes down to fit, something I address here. A hiring department needs to know its faculty members can fit within its faith tradition and the doctrines driving its mission; but at the same time, applicants need to know themselves whether they will fit comfortably within a department. After all, when we offer you a job, we are extending a or year, or even careerlong commitment to you, to your work, and to the gifts you can offer our students.
