Scenes on the course were filmed at the Rolling Hills Golf Club in Davie, FL (currently Grande Oaks Golf Club), and the dinner scene was shot at the Boca Raton Hotel and Club in -- you guessed it, Boca Raton, FL.

The trailer should help convince you: But in general, tourism has received a huge boost from the Netflix show. And unlike some TV series set in Florida but mostly filmed elsewhere step forward, Dexter's Bloodline features real locations that fans can visit – which gave me the inspiration for this article. I spent countless hours carrying out online research, poring over Google Maps and trying to obtain clues from pausing the episode and searching satellite imagery for a match. I had to deal with incorrect information one blogger confusing the Whistle Stop bar with the Ocean View pub – I mean really! Luck also played a part – there were at least two places for which zero information was available online, but I found on Google Earth purely by chance. And if you find any mistakes, please let me know. Places are obviously used many times in the series and are only included the first time they appear. Most of the action takes place in Islamorada and nearby parts of the Middle and Upper Keys. As you know I visited the area in January this year and I can also tell you that I will be returning with my family at Christmas – at which time I will be attempting to visit each location and any additional ones from the second season. And I will of course publish a guide to season two in a couple of months once it has aired. I have included links to relevant articles on the site as well as to the locations themselves where appropriate. Netflix obviously owns the rights to the series, images and video. I have indicated the run times for each episode as well as the start time and time remaining for each scene. These are as exact as possible and I included both markers because the Netflix app displays different information depending on the device used – on the PC, Mac and iPad app I only see the time remaining, whereas on the PlayStation 3 version I see the time elapsed. The show opens with a beautiful aerial shot of a bus driving the Overseas Highway which runs all the way through the Florida Keys to Key West. No amount of research revealed any clue about one of the most important scenes in Bloodline, but I found it by accident on Google Earth. There is little evidence from this scene, but it will become clear later – Elapsed time: The Rayburn House Location: Not only is the actual place real, it actually is a hotel. The bad news is that it is a justifiably very expensive one. If you are feeling flush, you can stay at The Moorings Village and Spa where rates start at USD a night and there is a minimum stay of 2 nights. If you really want the Bloodline experience you can rent the entire two-storey house that served as the Rayburn family residence for the tidy sum of USD per night – Alternatively, visit the beach bar at the resort which also featured in the show. Bus ticket booth Location: It looks like this place was dressed by the set designers as Google Earth reveals it to be no more than a plain shack.
