That requires a little more reason and a little less shouting. Getty Images One of the best pieces of advice I was ever given was from a friend in the restaurant business. If I were planning to complain about any part of my meal or service, he said, I should wait until I had eaten all I was going to eat that night. As with restaurants, so with schools. So think carefully before putting on your Mr Angry face and marching into the school for a spot of ranting. So how best to go about complaining to a school? Complaints are destructive things. You have to be more subtle. Do you really have a point? Try to remember that your child is not the only student in the school. Shocking, I know, but what can you do? As an aside, it always seems to be the parents who are most committed to competition, setting, ranking and all the rest of the dog-eat-dog stuff who get most upset when the dog bites their own puppy. Your child is adamant that no instruction was received. If you think a raw deal has been had, then speak to the teacher, politely. In sensible schools, this will be laughed at, and then ignored after a polite acknowledgement. In less sensible schools, many man-hours will be wasted in justification, explanation and recrimination as everyone scrambles to cover their arses. This is not a positive relationship for the future. Early on in my teaching career, I suffered this fate. It was a joke. Not my best, but the sort of thing that raises a loyal chuckle on a boring Thursday afternoon. This was not an effective complaint. Ask first, shout later Schools can be odd institutions, with odd ways of operating, and often employing odd people. The students, being children, are by definition also odd. So odd things might happen. If something happens that seems, well, odd, then try to approach it first by asking someone to explain. That completely unmarked book might be a sign of a teacher who has lost his pen-of-officially-approved-colour since the start of the year. Or it might be a sign that all the assessments are now done online. Still want to complain? Having accepted all the above, there will be occasions when the school, or a teacher, does get things wrong. This might take a couple of days, but it will happen. All the recorded complaints get turned into a mix tape with a death-metal backing track, and played at the end-of-year, sixth-form disco. Stick to the issues, like whether a class move might be possible, or more teacher supervision at potential breaktime flashpoints – we might be able to do something about those. If you think the school is getting something consistently wrong, then join up. Curriculum and exams Complain to the government. Snow days Complain to God. All things considered State schools are, by nature, inclusive institutions and encompass all opinions and tastes. Let me give you an example of how other parents get in the way: Many schools have taken to handing parents five-minute time-slots with teachers. Except the orderly timetable usually lasts approximately fifteen minutes. Parents get lost on the school site when trying to find a toilet; their child loses her appointment sheet. All these things happen. But they also want to talk about their child. Some of them carry on even after the five minutes is up. I used to sit helplessly smiling back, while watching a pile-up of agitated other parents behind them. It seems to work. Nearly all the issues you might feel are worthy of complaint stem from this inescapable fact:

2: Schools out, lets shout HOORAY, HOORAY, HOORAY! - Pastor Jen | twclubbock

June 8th School's out Let's shout! $30/night for teachers with ID. Games, contests and more! DJ. Booking Form. Online bookings are not available for this event.

We are all consumed about thinking about summer, and vacations, cook outs and relaxing at the lake. Not to mention that our children are going crazy because they get to sleep in and there is NO school. Let me address this vacation mindset for a minute. After all, HE provided this vacation time. When I was living among you, you lived in responsive obedience. Better yet, redouble your efforts. Be energetic in your life of salvation, reverent and sensitive before God. Do everything readily and cheerfully—no bickering, no second-guessing allowed! Go out into the world uncorrupted, a breath of fresh air in this squalid and polluted society. Provide people with a glimpse of good living and of the living God. Actually, if you really take a quick look in your life, you might realize that THIS season may actually be your biggest test and temptation season. For the spirit is willing, but the body is weak! All of us are going to have a life of practicing on how to get OVER temptation. God is faithful, and he will not let you be tempted beyond your ability, but with the temptation he will also provide the way of escape, that you may be able to endure it. The devil is waiting to get you at the right, wrong time!!!! You cannot be tempted if you have no desire. You will always have desire in which to be tempted. If you wipe out desire, you have a perfectly saved zombie! You are alive but not living. Have you ever asked God to remove a desire?? Are you just tired of fighting the desire, OR, are you not getting the victory? God is not moving your weakness, but he is giving the power to overcome!! The enticing strength weakens as Gods power overcomes and beats that desire. Have you ever been around someone that reads you for your weakness? Doom to the world for giving these God-believing children a hard time! The only way to get over it is to allow God to hold you. We get side tracked by the wrong things. The devil wants to break you down, but God wants to use these things to raise you up!! Let that Reflex just be a part of who you are! Learn to walk in GOD confidence! So as I go back to referencing this vacation season, remember to take God with you! Let this summer mark the season that you dig your heels in and let your relationship with God grow and flourish. And so they never grow into maturity. Have an incredible summer! Relax and enjoy the Goodness of God in your Life. I pray that your life produces a huge harvest in this season and that your natural reflex to temptation will be NO!
