When I was young, every small town still had its own gang of veterans wearing berets and playing tiddlywinks in local pubs. But listen to this, rising up from the lips of a ghoul: Rosenberg was born, the son of Russian immigrants, in Bristol in and brought up in Stepney, in east London. He managed to take evening classes at the art school at Birkbeck College, and in , when he was 21, some wealthy Jewish ladies clubbed together to pay for him to be able to study at the Slade School of Art. He associated not just with artists but also with the poet Laurence Binyon and with Edward Marsh. A civil servant who was later to become private secretary to Winston Churchill, Marsh edited the volumes of Georgian Poetry. As well as his painting, Rosenberg was busy writing poems. His early work, as one might expect, is thrusting, ambitious, and not always very good. A lot of the poems are sublimations of awakening sexual desire. The whole world around him is writhing in passion: Throughout these early poems Rosenberg is desperate to connect "The world rustles by me - let me heed. Instead what he got was this: His poetry longed for rapture: His first war poem, "On Receiving News of the War", written while he was visiting his sister in South Africa in , seems to sniff out the calamity about to overcome him: The vast, benevolent orchestrating Nature of the early poems suddenly becomes a personal, spiteful malicious God, and Rosenberg turns from the worship of the female to hatred for the Father. After the rounded forms and structures of his early verse, he now finds himself struggling for words: Bleistein with a Cigar", written a few years later "The rats are underneath the piles. Because he needed the money. Desperate, passionate, gauche, self-educated, deeply religious, sceptical of modernism and yet profoundly modern in spirit, a man possessed, according to his friend Binyon, "of vivid enthusiasms", and having to snatch his working time in difficult circumstances "It is only when we get a bit of rest and the others might be gambling or squabbling I add a line or two, and continue this way" , Rosenberg should be acknowledged not perhaps as a great English poet, but at least as something typical. A few days earlier he wrote to his friend Marsh about "my being lucky enough to bag an inch of candle that incites me to this pitch of punctual epistolary. I must measure my letter by the light".
