Creationist critics often charge that evolution cannot be tested, and therefore cannot be viewed as a properly scientific subject at all. This claim is rhetorical nonsense. Each and every human being on Earth has both the responsibility and the privilege of viewing themselves as Divine beings with the power to bring about peace. I love this work I do. A lot has happened since then. There are as many perspectives on the nature of God as there are people. However much any of us may choose to argue, or to fight and kill, for our point of view, the nature of God is an unanswerable question. Perhaps there is a specific answer, that we will never learn - in this lifetime. Perhaps the nature of God is so complex and multifaceted that each view of God describes an aspect of the complex whole. Or perhaps the nature of God is actually defined by our beliefs. Sometimes it takes years of psychotherapy to gain freedom from regrets about what you did or did not do, and freedom from resentment over what others did or did not do. Sometimes it takes a lifetime of self-talk to remember to put the past in the past where it belongs. However, sometimes a simple symbolic act can help immeasurably to grant ourselves freedom from the past. If you are lucky it happens once in a lifetime. If a garden is a site for the imagination, how can we be very far from the beginning? The athlete or pianist who practices the same routine day after day, year after year, has their eye on a goal. The unending repetition is a conscious choice in the pursuit of a life dream. But what about the sameness of most lives? Observe the morning commute, the after-work drink, the Sunday football game or religious service - how many of those people are consciously following their dream, training their mind, body, and spirit through that daily repetition? And how many are mindlessly slogging through each day out of habit and boredom? I promise teach karate to you, you promise learn. I say, you do, no questions. The repetition of a faulty swing would be worse than useless. It would ingrain bad habits. The same is true of emotional responses. If we allow ourselves to continue to have the same angry responses, we just entrench our anger habit. But if we strive - through consciousness, visualization, and coaching - to moderate our anger response, over time, we can train ourselves to respond to events as we choose - without anger. It tops up your ability, like sharpening a carving knife. You can get away with not doing it for a while, as long as you have reached a certain standard of fitness. He knows too much. I had been told that the training procedure with cats was difficult. Mine had me trained in two days. Fifty percent of the doctors in this country graduated in the bottom half of their classes. Training will not substantially help matters. We have to learn to live with it. Here are several choices that I have created - if one looks good you are welcome to take it. Untitled[edit] I have replaced the previous version of this article. I have written this article of a course. It was researched, includes a bibliography, and includes material from the previous article. Setting[edit] I just worked under the heading "setting". September Learn how and when to remove this template message m vnmvnmnbmoiy b h87 The central theme to the book of Proverbs can be linked to Proverbs 1: The thought pattern that the reverence and respect for God in all circumstances brings true knowledge is encouraged in this book. The book centers on the willingness to learn as important. Proverbs calls this kind of obedience the love of the Lord. This obligation, which is similar to the knowledge of God that they had from the prophetic books, involves reverence, gratitude, and commitment to do the will of God in every circumstance. Who would like to help with this? Thoughts and ideas are repeated over and over again and could be significantly cleaned up -- it need to be streamlined and organized more efficiently. Also, more sources need to be found and cited in the article, not just placed in a long list at the end. This is my indication that I will begin or really, continue to clean this article up. Any suggestions, complaints, protests, can be given here and I will be willing to discuss. There are a number of questionable and unverified claims in there, e. The Authorship sections is filled with apologetic nonsense. What you call "apologetic nonsense" differs from "critical scholars", but both views are promoted by published scholars. For Wikipedia, that is enough. Pete unseth talk Any Orthodox Jew, scholar or not, will adhere to the traditional teaching that Solomon wrote at least all of Proverbs up to ch. Has this been determined? I ask because for the article Scientia potentia est , it would be great to know when the phrase was first used Chapter 10, for example, is accepted as pre-exilic even by people who do not accept that it was written by Solomon himself. Chapters are clearly later, as are the higher numbered chapters. So with so many different layers, how do you assign a "year of authorship"? What meaning would it really have? The material about whether wisdom is divine or taught does not seem to be a contradiction, but showing another facet. The two are not posed as contradicting each other. I am interested in changing the section on "contradiction", but want to listen to others first. But this in turn makes sense only if you also know that although, grammatically, these and many proverbs are stated as sweeping generalizations, in fact, they are not: Then the whole point becomes that sometimes, it is Proverbs Apparently the LXX translator did not agree with this, since he translated the two with a difference between them that removes the contradiction: So in his interpretation, the idea of both proverbs is to wait until the fool is finished raging, and then answer him and refute him so that his dangerously false idea is not allowed to stand and do harm to others. Solomon was not gathering examples of sayings that people in his culture were saying, he had a specific purpose and theme to his writing. These were proverbs of Solomon, not proverbs compiled by Solomon. These "contradictions" come from a presuppositional understanding of this book as unorganized sayings. The constant use of "contradiction" shows that this article has this bias. Verse 5, on the other hand, tells us that there are times when a fool has to be addressed so that his foolishness will not go unchallenged. Our answer in this case is to be one of reproof, showing him the truth so he might see the foolishness of his words in the light of reason. Did God "acquire" wisdom? And what does the wife of chapter 31 have to do with the concept of "goddess" in the same paragraph. I got lost on these. For example, Christians have traditionally understood Wisdom in chapter 8 in a Trinitarian sense. How have traditional Jewish scholars viewed Wisdom in chapter 8. What is the best way forward on this, a way of wisdom, not personal attacks or narrow agendas? In other words, Lady Wisdom in later 2nd Temple Judaism became an intermediary between God and man, and also became identified with the creative Word, the Christ; the Holy Spirit comes from a different place, the Hebrew ruah or "spirit of God". But yes, it did indeed play a role in the development of the Trinitarian idea. Just throwing it out there is not enough. D8C2 talk "Preceding undated comment added This made me "stumble" while reading. Georg Stillfried talk It is true that Proverbs refers to wisdom as "her," or "she. Anybody have evidence that would allow this thought to be retained in the article? The article mentions that in the 4th-century, the Book of Proverbs was a favorite source of Arian Christians to use against their opponents. Lets see what we have in other articles on the development and controversies of the Christian canon: The Bryennios List , dating to the 1st or early 2nd century lists Proverbs among its 27 canonical books. This canon excludes the Book of Esther , and seems to include the Book of Wisdom. However, Marcion rejected the entire Old Testament , as he believed that the god mentioned there was not the Christian God. It excludes the Twelve Minor Prophets: Origen considered canonical the Letter of Jeremiah , and mentions the Book or Books of Maccabees without a clear indication of their canonicity, or number. It is unclear whether the First Council of Nicaea , dating to the 4th century, made any decisions concerning the Biblical canon. There is a claim by Jerome , that the Council debated the canonicity of the Book of Judith and decided in its favor. Jerome may have invented the debate, which is not mentioned in any other source. The canon promoted by Roman Emperors Constantine the Great and Constans , dating to the 4th century, is disputed and may not have survived. The closest approximates to it may be the Codex Vaticanus and the Codex Sinaiticus. Both apparently considered Proverbs canonical. The canon of the Council of Laodicea , dating to the 4th century, includes Proverbs. It also includes the Book of Baruch and the Letter of Jeremiah. It excludes the Book of Revelation and apparently condemned the Book of Enoch. The authenticity of this canon is disputed, though it matches the canon endorsed by Cyril of Jerusalem. It excludes the Book of Esther. His canon may have been endorsed by his employer, Pope Damasus I , though there are insufficient mentions of this endorsement in primary sources. He may have included Proverbs in the "five books of Solomon" which it mentions. Augustine got his canon approved by the Synod of Hippo , and two Councils of Carthage , Its authenticity is disputed and it may be a 6th-century forgery, attributed to a long-dead Pope. The canon used by the Codex Alexandrinus , dating to the 5th century, includes Proverbs, along with the entire Septuagint. The Canons of the Apostles , dating to the 7th-century, but probably based on earlier works, apparently includes Proverbs.

All illustrate wrongs way to pray. I did that Monday. At the end of these chapters, he invites the reader to agree or disagree with him at any point, but in love. I found myself disagreeing with facets of one or two principles in this list, but overall, the list is excellent and I commend it to you. However, it makes sense to fast and pray in keeping with the teaching of Christ. The host pastor called on a college professor to lead in prayer. The man stood before the microphone and hereâ€™word for word, recorded on tapeâ€™is what he prayed: Bless the message of Dr. Strauss because we pray in his name. The conference director called on a man for prayer. Evidently, the fellow wanted to pray for the families of those who had been on the plane but could not remember the location of the crash. There are things God has done, and can repeat, but He has not repeated them and possibly never will. Moreover, there are things God can do but which He will not do, notwithstanding our much praying. Strauss was called to the bedside of a dying man 89 years old. His body was racked by cancer. The family had hoped he would live to see one hundred. A daughter asked Pastor Strauss to pray and ask God to raise up her father and give him an additional 11 years of life. He declined, adding that he had no leading from God to make such a request. Yet, neither she nor the other members of that family could produce through prayer the result she expected of me. This entry was posted in Prayer by Joe. Oh I wish that my prayers were always so sensible. Far too often, I have a far too selfish spirit, am lacking faith, have little thankfulness and am a million miles from abiding in Christ â€™ and then I need to bring this mess that is me into the presence of God. Not to mention, trying to pull the wool over the eyes of an omniscient being is not the brightest of moves. There is a fine line between that and simply trying to appear far more sensible than I am. Kellie on July 3, at 1: To me what stood out so strongly in the example prayer was the simplicity of it. No suggestions of how to meet the needs, no recommendations of how to carry out the requests and no wallowing in anxiety. It has really changed the way I see prayer. I think Chris is right- prayer time is battle ground time. Instead of putting on as mask you have to battle it out with your human nature. I should spend more time in prayer training my mind how to think. To force out human thought and worry and to get perspective on the reality that God has Plans I cannot come near to imagining, plans that are perfect and He loves me and every other human being on this planet. I knew Dr Strauss. He was a friend of my late Father. He was one of the most Godly, humble, sensible man I ever met. He and the late Dr. Andrew Telford were my models in the ministry. Thank you for your comments. My memories of Drt. Strauss came flooding back. Chet Griffin on July 3, at 5: Prayer is not like a comfortable touring sedan, cruising around and enjoying all the wonderful sights. Prayer is like a sturdy truck, going to the warehouse to pick up the goods; then returning home to get on with the work. Perry Lassiter on July 4, at 4:

In this little term, stuff doesn't have any especial meaning beyond its normal usage - it just means, well, stuff, and is used merely as an intensifier for the word nonsense. The term is sometimes written as 'stuff and non-sense' to distinguish the 'rubbish' meaning from the exclamatory one.
