It was just the way they were brought up: Simon was pretty sure. Beatriz, who Simon had liked on sight, leaned in across Julie and said: Simon could not help smiling back. Shadowhunters are searching all over the world for lost and scattered people with Shadowhunter blood. He has proven himself worthy. He winked at Simon. We take some mundanes, those with the Sight or with remarkable athletic promise, into the Academy. But they cannot keep up with real Shadowhunters. It would hardly be fair to expect them to. It is such a joy to see you all here at the auspicious official opening of the Academy, where we will be training a whole new generation to obey the Law laid down by the Angel. It is an honor to have been chosen to come here, and a joy for us to have you. There were about two hundred students here, he thought, uncomfortably crammed around rickety tables. He noticed again that several of them were very young, and grubby and desolate. Nobody looked as if they felt honored to be here. Julie talked about them as if they were noble, searching for lost Shadowhunter families and offering mundanes amazing opportunities, but some of these kids looked about twelve. Simon had to wonder what your life must be like, if you were ready to leave it all and go fight demons at twelve. Simon turned slowly and looked at George, who he hoped would feel him on this one. George, who obviously did feel him on this one, nodded and mouthed: George and Simon exchanged another speaking glance. A girl at the table behind Simon began to cry. She looked about thirteen. The dean soldiered on. We certainly intend to keep up that tradition! Simon lined up for food, and peered into the greasy depths of the dark liquid. Simon was exhausted and still starving when he crawled into bed that night. He tried to cheer himself up thinking again about how lately a girl had been on the bed. A girl on his bed for the first time ever, Simon thought, but then memories came like a wisp of cloud over the moon, dimming all certainty. He remembered Clary sleeping in his bed, when they were so little their pajamas had trucks and ponies on them. He remembered kissing Clary, and how she had tasted like fresh lemonade. And he remembered Isabelle, her dark hair flowing over his pillow, her throat bared to him, her toenails scratching his leg, like a sexy vampire movie aside from the bit about the toenails. The other Simon had been not only a hero but a lady-killer. Well, more of a lady-killer than Simon was now. Not until he was on his way to being better, being the person she wanted him to be.

And he did not know if he could be that guy she wanted, whether he wished it or not. The whole game has changed. You dated a member of the nobility? How am I ever going to compete with that? Isabelle put her fingers up to touch her brow. It was a gesture that seemed like disdainful weariness, like Isabelle was tired of all this, but Simon saw the way her eyes closed, as if she could not look at him when she spoke. I know you believed in me, Isabelle, I know you believed because you“you cared about him. That means more than I can tell you. He did not take her in his arms but he stood a little distance away from her, their hands linked across the distance. Her trembling mouth sparkled, and so did her eyelashes. He did not know if this was indomitable Isabelle crying, or whether it was sparkly mascara. All he knew was that she shone, like a constellation in the shape of a girl. He just looked at her. There were so many things that question could mean, and so many ways to answer. But there are cowardly Shadowhunters and evil Shadowhunters and hopeless Shadowhunters. Not just why you want to be special. I know that I want to be here. I know I need to be here. I know what I said to you, at first, and I know what you hoped. That I could turn back into who I was before. I was really wrong and I am really sorry. This time Simon knew it was absolutely his fault. She was already leaving as she said: He lay there, listening to George chatter and scrub the walls. Simon retreated to where he believed nobody would ever find him. He went and sat in the bathroom. The stone flags were cracked in the bathrooms; there was something dark in one of the toilets. Simon hoped it was just a result of people throwing away the soup. He had half an hour of peace in the bathroom, alone with the horrible toilets, until George poked his head around the door. I cannot stress that enough. I just wanted to be alone and think depressing thoughts. You want to know a secret?
