Road Maps Innovation Culture All building blocks are based on common sense. A smart 12 year old understands the meaning of each building block. Successful innovation work happens when you consider all six categories and reflect on where to invest your time and energy. Start with good briefings Getting a good briefing requires two roles: Before you start an innovation process, make sure you have the information you need. Place the information in the 6 briefing parts. Provides the big picture. What resources are available? Bring in a mix of innovators to conjure refreshing, disturbing, provocative thinking. You will surprised how much they can contribute Creating Community 2. No Creating Community 2. Teenagers, students, artists, freaks! Champs often forget about this vital factor, especially in ongoing innovation work. This leads to many projects going dormant after an invigorating launch. Let participants share their experience. The beauty of the Idea Machine Process: Idea Machine Process 4. Results are well documented. They discover, combine and enhance. What should happen now, what comes then, what later and what might we consider doing? By designing your Road Map, you automatically think about sequence and resources.
