Slam poetry plays a major role in Colleen Hoover's "Slammed." So instead of the traditional way, I present you my attempt at a simple poetic review. Note: "Schooled" is originally written by Layken Cohen, the main female character in this book.

The attractive, year-old new neighbor with an intriguing passion for slam poetry and a unique sense of humor. Within days of their introduction, Will and Layken form an intense emotional connection, leaving Layken with a renewed sense of hope. Not long after an intense, heart-stopping first date, they are slammed to the core when a shocking revelation forces their new relationship to a sudden halt. Daily interactions become impossibly painful as they struggle to find a balance between the feelings that pull them together, and the secret that keeps them apart. From Power Poetry dot com: After performing, they receive scores from 5 randomly selected judges. I never thought that I would end up reading a Colleen Hoover book. My aversion to these authors is pretty shallow, really. I just see these authors and their books hyped up all over the blogosphere, and I immediately think that I will not be into them. It was great, and I one-clicked the next book in the series, downloading it to my e-reader as soon as I finished the last page of Slammed, 1. Here is a non-competitive version of a fantastic stand-up poetry performance: I am going to start with the things I did not like about the story. I will keep it brief. Cooper is kinda creepy and kind of an a-hole. I wish the author had focused more on the relationship development between Will and Layken than on the subplot issues and characters. I will not expand on the aforementioned details because they will jump off the page once you start reading the book. But trust me, put them aside and keep reading. It will be worth it. Okay, now onto the things I enjoyed about this book. If the female MC, Layken, was not 18 years-old in the story, I would have had a problem with this book. How can anyone resist a teacher-student romance when both are beyond the age of consent?! This sets the tone for a book that is filled with multiple unexpected moments that are funny, seductive, and heavy. I think the moment that Layken and Will discover that they are in a teacher-student situation could have been written with more intensity and awkwardness, but I digress. This book deals with some heavy, heart-wrenching issues in such a beautiful way. It had me in tears multiple times. The author uses song lyrics and poetry throughout the book to reinforce the theme of each chapter, and it was not annoying or cliché but lovely, and it added depth to an otherwise fast and fun romance novel. I know this book has probably been reviewed a kazillion times by now, so I will end it there. Have you read Slammed by Colleen Hoover? I would love to hear your thoughts in the comment section below.

2: Colleen Hoover - Book Series In Order

Colleen Hoover is the author of five New York Times bestselling novels. Her first series was published in and includes SLAMMED, POINT OF RETREAT and the companion novel THIS GIRL. Her second series, published in , includes the #1 NYT's bestseller HOPELESS and the companion novel, LOSING HOPE.

Here is the book that kept me up until 2am laughing and crying and sighing. At first wayyyyyy in the beginning! What did I know?! Cause I was simply blown away at a certain early revelation in the book, and then every moment after. I was all! No. I was on the edge of my seat for the entire way after that. Sure, the book might be laugh-out-loud funny, there are so many times I giggled with glee but the romantic tension is off the charts, and the circumstances for all! just INTENSE. Wait, let me take that back. Yeah I know right!?! Lots have cried over books that! sure. Have had me tear up! just a bit. That would give any easy-cryer reason to cry. Too far gone to keep it from my husband had he been awake, but who, I am thankful , is in full-snore mode. I was wiping my face with my pajama top, and no matter how much I wiped, my face was soaked. And so was my top. Remember that flu I had a few weeks ago? The tissues that I had left from that episode are Menthol Vicks flavored. My dog even felt the need to comfort me, and I giggled which immediately set me into more sobs. What do they call that? But I DID have moral support! I just finished reading Slammed by Colleen Hoover, and let me just say this, I hardly ever cry when reading but this book had me sobbing. The love story and the way life unfolds in this book is just amazing. You ladies really need to read this one. There are 2 books. I read both back to back. Thanks for the info!! The second one is good as well. I swear I gasped, and then immediately hooted with joy at what I realized I was in for! Christina: You laugh, and cry so much! And the Avett Brothers fit perfectly with the whole book. I could imagine every one of those songs when they were mentioned. Chuck Norris is killing me! So good! I know the Chuck Norris was awesome! I sooooo wish I could talk to you while you read! Which part are you at? The top of my pajama shirt is soaked. No tissues handy! I feel puffy-faced Christina: Another amazingly awesome read. Am I crying again? Tomorrow book 2 for me. You made me cryyy and laugh!my brother does the Chuck Norris thing!lol. Everthing was Chuck Norris. I am running off to read it right now! Jumping off the computer now to tear into my kindle! Anyone reading this book! Does Slammed rock, or does Slammed rock? Where in the heck has this book been hiding? This is what I love about reading!!!! In fact, All I want to do is immediately move onto book 2. Which, happily, is already on my iPad. Ahhhh this is one I can barely tell you a thing, because you need to get the full impact to fully appreciate it. I will tell you only this. Then she meets new friends at school and in her neighborhood. And she and I I learned about slam poetry. I wanna play slam-poetry too!! Slammed right through me. Slammed to the other side of me. But you took those ragged pieces and taped them together. I am ready for 2. Maybe I need more practice. The author just sent me this awesome little tidbit and video. A SLAM poetry artist performed her piece!! Anyway, my best friend surprised me and contacted him and had him read one of the poems out of my book. Here is the link: Just wanted you to take a look at it.

3: Book review: Point of Retreat (Slammed #2) by Colleen Hoover

Colleen Hoover is the #1 New York Times bestselling author of Slammed, Point of Retreat, This Girl, Hopeless, Losing Hope, Finding Cinderella, Maybe Someday, Maybe Not, Ugly Love, Confess, November 9, It Ends with Us, and Without Merit.

Hardships and heartache brought them togetherâ€¦now it will tear them apart. I loved everything about their story and the beautiful, complex characters that surrounded them. This series touched me on a level most books never even come close to.. Every time I came across quotes or Avett Brothers lyrics or poetry, I held my breath with anticipation as I searched for the meaning embedded in the words. I truly love that. This is such a great series that is so beautifully written.. I highly recommend these books! April 30th by Atria Books Pages: There are two sides to every love story. As much as Layken relishes their new life together, she finds herself wanting to know everything there is to know about her husband, even though Will makes it clear he prefers to keep the painful memories of the past where they belong. In This Girl, Will tells the story of their complicated relationship from his point of view. Their future rests on how well they deal with the past in this final installment of the beloved Slammed series. However, that did not influence this review in any way. I put this whole series on my top shelf! Life wants you to fight it. Heck, I adored the entire series. And for so many different reasons! It was like taking a reminiscent stroll down memory lane. I could not put this book down. There is so much emotion packed into every single page of this book.. Will, Layken and their romance.. Will and Layken had this instantaneous, super magnetic and totally swoonworthy whirlwind romance that will have you sighing and crying and yelling and swooning HARD all over the place. If you read this series for nothing other than to experience the romance aspect of it, then do it. I promise you will fall in love with these characters and the love they share for one another just like I did. I absolutely loved it. Poetry is such a beautiful form of creative expression. I got goosebumps and butterflies and cried a little as I read through each one.. I think I might be a weeeeeeee bit emotional, eh? I seriously highlighted at least three quarters of this book! And then the moment I turned that last page, I immediately went back to the beginning and flew through it again!

I slide the door down and pull the latch shut, locking up eighteen years of memories, all of which include my dad. She and my dad argued for nine months over what I would be named. She loved the name Layla, after the Eric Clapton song. Dad loved the name Kennedy, after a Kennedy. They agreed to take the first three letters of both names and compromised on Layken, but neither of them has ever once referred to me as such. I get the glance. I walk up the porch steps and head inside the house to make a walkthrough before the final turn of the key. All of the rooms are eerily empty. These last six months have been a whirlwind of emotions, all of them low. Moving out of this home was inevitable, I realize that. I just expected it to come after the end of my senior year. I pick it up, wipe the dust off of it and run it back and forth between my fingers. I was five years old and my mother had left her trimming scissors on the bathroom counter. Apparently, I had done what most kids of that age do. I cut my own hair. I thought that if I cut my hair, it would immediately grow back and no one would notice. I cut a pretty wide chunk out of my bangs and sat in front of the mirror for probably an hour, waiting for it to grow back. I picked the straight brown strands up off the floor and held them in my hand, contemplating how I could secure them back to my head, when I began to cry. When dad walked into the bathroom and saw what I had done he just laughed and scooped me up, then positioned me on the countertop. He then turned me around to face the mirror. I wore that clip in my hair every day for two months and my mother never once mentioned it. Now that I look back on it, I realize he more than likely told her what I had done. But when I was five, I believed in his magic. I look more like my mother than I did him. Mom and I are both of average height. We both have brown hair that, depending on the weather, is either straight or wavy. Her eyes are a deeper emerald than mine, although it could be that the paleness of her skin just makes them more prominent. I favor my dad in all the ways that count. We had the same dry sense of humor, the same personality, the same love of music, the same laugh. Kel is a different story. He took after our dad in the physical aspect with his dirty blond hair and soft features. I walk to the sink and turn it on, rubbing my thumb over the thirteen years of grime collected on the hair clip. I guess with such a big age difference and no other siblings, he has to find a way to entertain himself somehow. I place the hair clip in the pocket of my jeans and head back out the door, locking up my home for the very last time. Kel switches between Mom and me, riding the final day with me in the U-Haul. We complete the last exhausting nine-hour stretch throughout the night, only stopping once for a short break. The cul-de-sac is not very long, lined with about eight single story brick houses on each side of the street. Honestly, it looks like a decent neighborhood. Way too much concrete. I already miss home. Our new landlord e-mailed us pictures of the house so I immediately spot which one is ours. We had a ranch-style home in Texas on several acres of land. The miniscule amount of land surrounding this home is almost nothing but concrete and garden gnomes. The front door is propped open and I see an older man who I assume is our new landlord come outside and wave. I drive past the house about fifty yards so that I can back into the driveway where the rear of the U-Haul will face the front door. Before I put the gear shift in reverse, I reach over and shake Kel awake. Hop out and go introduce yourself while I back up. My mother pulls in beside me in my jeep. I watch as she gets out and greets the landlord. I crouch down a few inches in the seat and prop my foot against the dash. I lean my head back and watch Kel and his new friend sword fight with imaginary swords in the street. He was upset when mom first decided on the move. Mostly because he was in the middle of his little league season. He had friends he would miss, but at the age of nine your best friend is usually imaginary, and transatlantic. Mom subdued him pretty easily by promising he could sign up for hockey, something he wanted to do in Texas. It was a hard sport to come by in the rural south. After she agreed, he was pretty upbeat, if not stoked about Michigan. I understand why we had to move. Dad had made a respectable living managing a paint store. Mom worked PRN as a nurse when she needed to, but mostly tended to the house and to us. About a month after he died, she was able to find a full-time job. She said there was a job that could pay her more, but we would have to move. She was offered a job from her old high school friend, Brenda. It paid more than anything she could find in Texas, so she had no choice but to accept. My grandparents are deceased and she has no one to help her. He waits for me to slump over, but I just roll my eyes at him. He looks a couple of years older than me and quite a bit taller. The boys are flailing around and his muscles flex under his sleeves as he tries hard to hold onto them. They both have smooth olive skin, the same jet black hair, even the same cropped hair style. My first instinct is to crawl back inside the U-Haul and hide in the floor for the remainder of my life. Instead, I yell "Brains" once more and lunge forward, pretending to bite the younger boy on top of his head. I grab Kel and his new friend and start tickling them until they melt into heaps on the concrete driveway. As I straighten up, the older brother extends his hand. "We live across the street," he says as he points to the house directly across from ours. I reciprocate his handshake. "I guess I live here," I say as I glance to the house behind me. Our handshake lingers as neither one of us says anything. I hate awkward moments.

Beschreibung bei Amazon The agents of large publishing houses are starting to take a closer look at self-publishing sales. These are indicators of trends and have led to a new category for publishers to consider, that of young adult romance fiction. The success of some self-published authors has turned some heads in the industry. One of the most successful self-published authors is Colleen Hoover. She was one of the first to be picked up by a large publishing house for her first book entitled Slammed. Background As an independent American author from Texas, Colleen Hoover came to writing as a hobby, but still something she felt compelled to do. Like most modern working women, she balances her work, her marriage, her two young sons and still finds joy in writing and promoting her own creations. As all good writers realize, she writes what she knows – family, friendship, change, and especially love. Her plots and characters have immense appeal among young women readers, and she sets her characters in modern day situations of friendship, new relationships, first love, and heartbreak. She takes the perspective that falling in love can be a lot like falling into poetry. In this story we meet Layken, an 18 year old forced into the new setting of small town Michigan after being raised in Texas. Her father has died tragically and she is losing hope. In her new home she makes new friends and meets an attractive neighbor. The neighbor is also her poetry teacher and he attends slam poetry readings. More drama ensues and their relationship is slammed to a sudden halt. They struggle to find balance between the feelings that pull them together. Add to this an important secret that threatens to keep them apart. In this story it is only through poetry that the truth is in their hearts, and the characters of Layken and Will hope for a future where their love can be a cause for celebration, not regret. Point of Retreat In the sequel to her enormously popular bestseller Slammed, Colleen Hoover continues the story of Layken and Will and their passionate connection. As their emotional story continues, an unforeseen and stunning revelation twists the plot right from the get go. The two must decide if they are willing to fight for a future together when it is all put at risk of falling apart. Will the drift back into solitude and heartache or persevere and overcome together. Sometimes a relationship is truly tested. How far will these characters go to prove their love for each other? How far apart do they have to fall to realize how much they belong together? What is the point of retreat? How will the decisions they make effect the people around them that they hold near and dear to their hearts? This is a genuine story of young newlyweds, and the years of discovery still going on between these two beloved characters. By the end of the trilogy, it is apparent that the future rests on how well Layken and Will manage to deal with their pasts, together. Other Books Colleen Hoover continues to craft novels that have become bestsellers, and not through the conventional publishing house methods. She is a forerunner in an emerging group of independent romance writers that connect with their fan base in blogs, websites and book signings. Today, it is easier than ever to truly communicate with an author and to get response to comment, praise and even criticisms. This is what fuels self-published independent authors. Instant response from their readership, that can guide their projects, and even their plots, to meet the demands of their readers. For her fan base, Hoover has also made available a novella for free called Finding Cinderella. This is the beauty of internet marketing and social media. Even though Finding Cinderella is a sequel of sorts, it can stand alone too as its own work. Hopeless Here Colleen Hoover has emerged with a new story based on Sky, a high school senior who has her first romantic encounter with Dean Holder, a boy with a reputation and a mysterious past. Writing about dealing with people who have devastating pasts is very current theme for Colleen. The two are drawn to each other, even when they try to resist, and as secrets are revealed, their bond is intensified. Change in both of them is paramount and both characters hope to heal their emotional scars and live with less boundaries in their young lives. In the companion book Losing Hope, Colleen take the story further, but this time from the perspective of Dean, the troubled youth with secrets to reveal. Feelings of guilt and remorse have plagued the young Dean, and he searches for a sense of peace in his dilemma with Sky. When they finally reconnect, a greater pain embraced the young man. Connecting with Colleen Hoover Colleen Hoover is a regular blogger and also posts random videos on Instagram for her followers. She will candidly talk about
