In Soccer Systems and Strategies, two coaches of the Danish national team provide a practical guide to implementing the world's top styles of play into your game plan. They present soccer's four primary systems of play--defined by the number of players at each position and their alignment on the field--and then break down the different.

Every online punter interested in finding a way to beat the bookie needs to have a successful football betting system. This does not guarantee success see here for risk free betting , but it greatly increases the prospects of making a profitable bet. This post will look at a variety of winning football betting systems and will consider how easy they are to run and how profitable they are likely to be. Each system will require you to have an account already open with one of the online bookies so that you can place the bet. This strategy is simply trying to spot with games are likely to have at least a goal in the match. To win with this football betting system, you simply need to be confident that the match will not end in a draw. The system is simple, but as with all football betting systems, some discipline is required. As a result of its simplicity and high success rate, the profits are not all that high, but a system, which regularly wins a little is better than one with loses a lot! First, visit the BBC football fixtures page. This shows all of the forthcoming matches in all of the major leagues and international games. Then, you locate the match that you are interested in and click on the arrow on the left hand side next to the teams in the game. Newcastle v Manchester City The above match between Newcastle and Manchester City is an example of a good match to bet on. Neither team has been involved in a draw in the last 5 games. That indicates that they either have good attackers, poor defenders, or maybe both! What the statistics do show is that if current form is followed, then this match is unlikely to end and therefore it is a good candidate to place a bet for over 0. The next step is to go to your online bookie and place the bet. The Paddy Power website is currently offering the following odds on the Newcastle v Manchester City match in the over 0. The decimal odds here are basically 1. Obviously this return on investment is pretty low, but any profit is a good profit surely? If the return is not enough, the punter can analyse the statistics a little bit more carefully to spot a good bet. Paddy Power are offering the following in this market: The decimal odds of over 1. You can obviously increase the number of goals that you are backing, but the higher you go, the greater the risk that you will lose. That is why we are comfortable staying with the low profit, but high strike rate of backing the over 0. Value Football Betting System The other really successful way of being profitable with online football betting is to adopt a value-based strategy. This system does not rely on a detailed knowledge of the particular teams involved in the game, instead, it requires a good look at the relevant statistics and the odds of being offered by the bookies. In this system, we are betting on which team will win or draw the win – draw – win market. The bookies will offer odds based upon their own assessment of the likely outcome of the game. Lets use the Newcastle v Manchester City game as an example again. Paddy Power are offering the following odds on the result: You can see what their analysts think the result will be in percentage terms by doing the sum in the odds, adding 1 and then dividing by that number. This is how the bookies build the odds to their advantage to try to make sure that they turn a profit whatever the result. However, they are not always right and there is value to be found. Although the average online punter does not have the same ability to check previous form and statistics as the bookies do, we can take advantage of the internet for advice about the likely results of a football match. Statarea is probably the most comprehensive, free statistics service online. They provide detailed predictions based upon previous matches between the 2 teams, home and away form and current standings of the teams in the league. These are factored together to produce a helpful prediction of the result in a variety of markets. They predict the Newcastle v Manchester City match as follows: You can use these predictions to work out what the fair odds should be. On that basis, the odds should be 2. Therefore, the bookies are undervaluing the chances of a Newcastle win and this is a great opportunity for the online punter to place a bet. This value betting system takes a lot of time to compare prices offered by the bookies and statistical predictions, but it offers a huge opportunity for the punter to beat the bookie by removing the edge that the bookie has in a game where the odds do not support the statistics. There is a significant chance of losing bets using this system, but the point is not the have a high strike rate of wins, instead we are looking for a high profit rate. In other words, although you may not win all your matches, because you have such good value in the odds offered, you will make a profit in the long run. As with all football betting systems, it is important to stay focused and objective with your bets and the rewards will become evident after a while. Test out your football betting systems on paper Before any real money is risked at a bookie, it is very sensible for a punter to test out the system for a while on paper before actually taking the plunge. Keep a record of how you do after each game and then after 20 or so games, you will have an idea about whether or not these football betting systems are for you or not.

In general soccer, the in much less common in practical use as too many people are afraid of the back-four and coaches and players alike feel more comfortable with a sweeper. By the way, in the name of game systems, the goalie is omitted, it would actually be "" to be totally correct. In the pictures we show below, the goalie comes forward, and the more he does, the more important he becomes in the playing system. The "Flat Four" is considered a defensive version of Sports commentators on TV like to talk about two back-fours, or a double row. In the picture below, you can clearly see a formation in the lineup on the right. The difference between the two formations is easy to see in the picture below: We have numbered the players in the image to the side. These numbers denote the actual playing positions. The 1 Goalie The goalie plays along with the rest of the team in modern soccer. Often times he plays the role of the missing sweeper. Read more about this subject in our article: Player 2 and 5 are the left and right fullbacks and players 4 and 3 are the center backs. A short introduction and some training exercises to introduce the players the back-four can be found in the following articles: Directly in front of the center of defense, there are two players in front of the back-four. For that, a striker falls forward midfield to create a station to face off at One striker is playing high up the field capable of holding the ball up and laying it off to his partner. Ottmar Hitzfeld invented the term "wall players", which best describes the role of this striker. Using the with the "Flat Four", a very strong double defense wall is built, which makes it possible to double up on the opponents on the sidelines and close the center. Already at midfield, the enemy can be attacked at the wings. Passing lanes can be even easier to predict. It would be too easy then to describe the "Flat Four" as purely defensive. In the offensive, the strengths lie clearly in the wing positions. Thus, a sideline defender can attack over the wing and the corresponding midfielder immediately responds defensively covering his side. As a result, the gap between the two strikers will be further closed. And so a defensive midfielder becomes the third attacker. The big problem in this formation is the large gap between midfield and attack. During possession of the ball and when losing possession, this space closes up soon. There is also no playmaker and as a result, the central attacking midfield is occupied very thinly. The originality in this game develops mostly at the wings. This short text should be enough to give you a basic idea for now.

Different styles of play, philosophies and strategies of high level teams that employ high level specific strategies throughout the course of a season. The team with the best players will always win, no matter the strategy of the opponent right? Oh how wrong we are. Sure having great players goes an extremely long way but without discipline, organization and a detailed strategy going into a match even the most talented teams can be defeated. Read carefully now, here is the secret to all of soccer and the strategy that will win you every game. The secret is drumroll please there is no ONE best strategy. Your soccer strategy or tactics largely depend on who your opponent is, the strengths of your own team and the situation at hand. This tends to change from game to game and throughout the course of a season. Although sides do have strategies and tactics that work best for them and are a staple of their team, no one is best. The best strategy is the one that gets the desired performance from your team and desired outcome from the match and that constantly changes.

What Types of Strategy are There in Soccer? There are several and each coach will tell you they have a variation of one of these that is their own magic recipe, they are: You will see team such as Barcelona, Spain and Man City employ this tactic for large periods during a match. Keeping the ball, not forcing anything waiting for the right moment to slash the back line. By the time the opponent creates a turn over they are so dead tired from playing defense for so long that they give it right back to you. This soccer strategy can be physically and mentally deflating for the defending side. Counter Attacking -It says it in the name, sitting back in your own half and sucking a team in. Once the ball is turned over, you then counter your opponents by exploiting the space in behind them as they are caught on their heels. A team with speed, discipline and clinical finishing is required to properly execute this strategy. One mistake, miscue or error in judgment can make 89minutes of hard work go to waste. Choose your soccer strategy wisely now.

Defensive An emphasis on defense first and attack second. This means several things such as: Also commonly found in basketball applying high pressure on an opponent involves a team pressuring them as a unit and looking to cause a turnover. The idea here is to cause uncertainty and indecision to the ball carrier forcing them to make a poor decision causing to an error and loss of possession. This is also commonly used when a team wants to shift the momentum, put the pressure on one side or is down a goal and needs to get back into it. Sounds much more complicated then it really is. Also can be a great way to set up the counter attack. Staying tight and compact as a unit is the name of the game here, frustrating your opponents and making the best of your opportunities you do get at the other end. Focusing on Exploiting Certain Players or Positions on the Field Attacking certain weaknesses of your opponents or strengths of your own team such as getting the ball in a certain 1v1 match up as much as possible. Maybe you want to attack the wide areas of the field or you want to play balls in the air versus a short back line. Whatever it is find your strength to exploit their weakness, then you really got a dynamic soccer strategy.

Which Strategies do Professional Teams Use? Professional teams use several if not all the strategies listed above in the course of a playing season. One day may call for an all out attack exploiting a weaker team where as another match may require playing bunker defense before going back home for the second leg. Professional players get to the professional ranks because they have quality and already have a large skill set. This I believe is true for teams as well. Every successful team must be able to adjust their game plan slightly for every opponent. You must be versatile and able to apply any soccer strategy at any given time during the course of a year.
