Sep 30, Erin Lewis rated it it was amazing 4. This is the third and final book in The Three Graces series and I was really looking forward to reading it. This book is harder and edgier than the previous books in the series, dealing with sexual assault and PTSD. Farrell handled the subject well and I was impressed with her sensitivity. Rae Simmons ran from a past that very nearly took her life. Now living with her 3 year old autistic daughter Hannah in Posey, she dreads the past catching up with her. The past meets her present, when her former lovers walk into the restaurant where she works. It is obvious that Cord and Cam Colson are looking for her. The question is should Rae run or stand and face her past? I loved this book. I also loved the interaction of both the men with Hannah. I really enjoyed these books. I do hope that Ms. Farrell considers writing another book in this series to update us all on the three Graces and their significant others as in my opinion this would be beneficial as I for one want to know how their lives develop. This series gets better and better! These gals make me and my friends look way too vanilla! If we could only be so lucky Rachel has had a horrible hand dealt to her, but she keeps managing to pull herself up and become stronger and stronger. She is an inspiration for all women especially single mothers everywhere. The questionable present lets us watch as she tries to handle Cord and Cam being introduced back into her life. Can she trust them with her Hannah and her heart? She struggles with the question but the guys quickly prove they are more than man enough to handle the jobs. The last sentence of the book brought tears to my eyes and left me with a great hope of more to come from these three lovers This story was so different from the others and I loved it more for that exact reason. Nia has truly taken these ladies and made them strong, independent, sexy and loved tremendously. These types of relationships take work and communication but also patience which they all had for each other.. I was blown away by these stories and although they could be read as standalones, I would read then in sequence. Bravo Nia for giving these ladies life and us sexy hot fantasies. Fabulous, wonderful, intriguing, panty twisting, hotties, sex As you can see I loved this book equally as good as the first two. Love the MMF aspect, fantasy brought to life with this series. Learning to trust again, to feel. Jul 23, Tammy rated it it was amazing So all good things must come to an end, at least for now. There is so much story in not a lot of pages and the sex is really hot!!! When I was asked to review them I did not know what to expect because I am not usually a fan of paranormal books. I must say I was extremely satisfied with this series. It was also awesome to see autism dealt with in an open and sensitive way. This was an awesome, sexy, and enigmatic story. Jun 29, Zara Lorimer rated it it was amazing This is my favorite and book number three in the grace series. Rachel is a single mother and hiding because she is supposed to be dead. One day her old lovers walk into the small cafe where she works and her life is turned upside down as she rekindle her relationship with brothers Cord and Cam as thy fall in love with Rachel and her daughter, but then the question comes up. Nia Farrell has brought together four brave, loving, flawed, traumatized individuals and blended them together in such a way you experience the fear, joy, trepidation and excitement of their discoveries along the way throughout their journey. What a heartfelt story.

Standing in front of your mirror, you watched as your fingers gently traced the faint scar on your cheek. Your eyes noting the difference in skin color between it and your natural tone. The pads of your fingers sliding across the slight dip on your skin. He was failing at everything in life but somehow he managed to get a leg up on you. Whether you liked to admit it or not, the scar actually bothered you more than it should. Every chance you got to look at your reflection, you were looking at your scar. Fed up with your behavior, you tore your hand away from your face and balled up your fists against the desk. You decided to close your eyes. You hated how fixated you were on something cosmetic. It was only as strong as you made it to be, you reminded yourself. Opening your eyes against you blankly stared back at your reflection, your eyes involuntarily going to the scar. You can doll yourself up for our night together later! Besides it was Richie, he was like a brother you never wanted but appreciated having around. Do not make me get the soap again! Like routine, he waited until you were safely back on the ground before jumping off himself. Abandoning his bike on the curb just as the others had, he made his way over to the boys. You let them have their time together and decided to pick up their bikes off the ground to lean them against the fence in the drive way. As the boys chattered away about how much fun the quarry was going to be, you noticed that Beverly and Bill had yet to make an appearance. Crossing your arms over your chest, you raised an eyebrow at him. You really liked this flannel. You were going to say something back but another pair of hands poked your sides. A slight blush creeping on to his cheeks from how close you were to him. Whipping around, you were more than ready to punch Richie for scaring you again but instead of the usual messy mop of black hair, you saw a red one instead. You rolled your eyes but nonetheless pulled her into a hug, leaving Bill to be collected by the others to talk about their plans. As you hugged Bev, you noticed that something was different and just as fast as you pulled her in, you pushed her back. Getting a good look at her, your eyes scanned for what was missing. It took you a minute but you got it. Involuntarily your hand moved over to trace over your scar. Beverly could pull any thing off, she was pretty no matter what she wore or looked like. Talking about me over here? He gave you an appointed look before continuing on about how great he and his wang was. You were doing it again. You and Bev looked at each other before replying back to Richie, knocking his ego down a few pegs. Things were never the same after their first encounter with Henry. She had grown into someone much more beautiful. Humming and nodding his head once in a while to make it seem like he was listening in to the conversation at hand, Bill watched as the girls seemed to be giggling about something. What were they talking about, he thought. Was it something about him? Shaking his head, Bill tried to clear his mind of thoughts like that. Of course not, why would he be talking about him for? Knowing that she only did that when something was bothering her, Bill made a move to go check on her but Richie beat him to it. An unfamiliar feeling resting in the pit of his stomach as he watched his best friend and crush interact with one another. Step one complete, she thought as she left Bill to think about what she just said. But for now, what did you guys think of this part? Like do teenage boys think like that when they have a crush? Nevertheless please oh please oh please tell me what you think c:

There was something about the girl that he couldn't stop thinking about. Things were never the same after their first encounter with Henry. The girl he's only noticed from time to time in his classes became someone that was on his mind all the time.
