Looking for a time and attendance system in ? What Are Time and Attendance Systems? Time and attendance systems allow employees to clock in and out electronically via time clocks, internet-connected computers, mobile devices, and telephones. The data is instantly transferred into software that can seamlessly import it into your payroll solution. These systems do more than just track when employees come and go. Many are offered as cloud-based or on-premises solutions. The on-premises systems are stored on servers within your business, while the cloud-based systems are housed by your time and attendance system provider and accessed online. Pros and cons The biggest benefit of these digital systems is they eliminate the need for manual timecards. All the time is collected electronically, with the calculations done for you. This cuts down on the chance of errors. Another positive is that these systems manage all your time needs – employee attendance, PTO and scheduling – in one program. The biggest drawback to time-tracking systems is that they are more expensive than the old manual method where employees wrote down their hours each day or punched in and out using a paper timecard. Another potential downside is that they often force employers to curb the perception that asking employees to track their time is a form of micromanagement. Looking for information on time and attendance systems? Use the questionnaire below, and our vendor partners will contact you to provide you with the information you need: Cloud-based systems have smaller recurring monthly costs, while on-premises systems have larger one-time fees. With on-premises systems, you pay all your costs upfront. You can expect to pay several hundred to several thousand dollars for the software, licenses for each employee and installation. However, there typically is no ongoing support or software updates included in your one-time costs. Some services also assess a base monthly charge or a minimum monthly charge. Some providers charge a one-time setup and implementation fee. Unlike with on-premises systems, however, all software upgrades and support are included in your monthly expenses. What to Look for in a Time and Attendance System With so many systems on the market, it can be difficult to know which one is right for your business. Look for a system that allows employees to record their hours in multiple ways, such as through an internet-connected computer, smartphone, tablet, time clock, telephone or text messages. Tracks all time issues: This includes managing employee schedules and handling all PTO management. Since many employees and managers work outside the office, you want a system that is compatible with mobile devices so it is accessible from anywhere. Choose a system that integrates with the applications and software, such as HR and payroll programs, that you already use. Some systems provide notifications when employees are nearing overtime or forget to clock in or out. This can be helpful in controlling expenses. The ability to view original timesheet data along with any changes made by a manager or supervisor can be important in case of an audit. To learn about the options we think are best for a variety of business types, check out our best picks for time and attendance systems. Here are a number of questions and answers that may help you reach a decision. How are time and attendance systems different from traditional time clocks and time cards? The biggest difference is that everything is digitized and automated. Traditional time clocks and timecards require manual entry of data for everything. Time and attendance systems require a push of a button and all of the information is automatically synced into your software. That software then seamlessly integrates with your payroll solution. This eliminates duplicate entries and guesswork. In addition, time and attendance systems log hours, job codes, and information about breaks and PTO digitally and in real time. What type of time clocks are compatible with time and attendance systems? No longer are there simple punch time clocks. Is there a difference between a time and attendance system and a biometric system? Any time and attendance system that works with a biometric time clock is a biometric system. Because nearly every time and attendance solution that works with physical time clocks offers biometric options, there is very little difference between the two. Biometric time clocks are typically used by businesses concerned about buddy punching. However, even some of those systems now offer fingerprint scanners that plug into computers or use programs that take employee pictures via a computer camera as a way to incorporate biometric options. Do you have to use a time clock with a time and attendance system? Some businesses prefer that employees clock in and out only through a computer, mobile app or telephone. Not using a time clock can cut down on costs, as time clocks can run anywhere from a couple hundred to several thousand dollars each. Are time and attendance systems only good for businesses with hourly employees? While it might seem like time and attendance systems are only necessary for businesses with hourly workers, businesses with salaried employees can reap a number of benefits from them as well. Having a system that can track how long employees work on specific projects can help with labor projections. Additionally, businesses with salaried employees may appreciate the PTO management aspects of the system. How do time and attendance systems work for remote employees? These systems use GPS technology to monitor remote employees via mobile devices. Some systems use geofencing to limit where employees can clock in and out from, while others use geolocation to record exactly where workers are when they punch in and out. Additionally, systems use geolocation to track employees throughout the day, not just where they start and end their shifts. How do time and attendance systems integrate with payroll systems? Time and attendance systems integrate with payroll systems by allowing you to transfer your time and attendance data into your payroll program with the press of a button. This cuts down on errors and streamlines the entire payroll process. How do time and attendance systems manage paid time off? Time and attendance systems manage PTO in several ways. The first is that they can track how much time off employees have earned and used. The systems can track accruals for sick time, vacation, bereavement and any other type of time off employees may receive. Some time and attendance systems also handle the request and approval process. This allows employees to ask for time off directly within the system and managers can either approve or deny those requests. These can contribute in increasing sales and productivity. One of them is using a tool for employee time track.

Employee efficiency, as well as product effectiveness, is measured not only by the quality of work employees provide. It is also by the number of hours they spend for their daily tasks. Yes, quality and quantity should come together. Without one, effectiveness cannot exist in an organization. Employee A has produced an excellent work for the day. But he has done less than what is expected of him for eight hours. Employee B has accomplished so much for the whole duration of the work hours. However, his output is not of high standard. Which one should the company commend? The answer is no one. For a business to enjoy success output must be high, and so is the quality. What must they do then to guarantee employee and product efficiencies? An application for employee time track can offer assistance. As the day starts, bosses can include in the software the assignments employees are required to finish for the day. It will particularly record the time they used on the tasks. Through this, directors will know the people who neglect to perform as indicated by the prerequisites of the organization. This time tracker can then make ready for the ID of the issues, as well as the resolutions necessary. For instance, employee training may be the key or it may be termination of contracts. But for whatever it is, the ultimate goal is to ensure the usefulness of the workforce. In this approach, it is not only the quality time that is assured of businesses. For human resources department purposes, it monitors the attendance of the staff members. Employee time track software is essential in this time when entrepreneurs are seeking the effective methods to improve their sales and productivity. It can help them come up with decisions that directly affect the financial condition of the organizations. It may not be the ultimate solution but it can at least give way to a clearer picture of the situation.
