1: Start & Run a Bed & Breakfast (EPUB)

Last but not least, you shouldn't start a bed and breakfast for the money. Most bed and breakfasts are small, family-run businesses that don't make a huge amount of money. Make sure you evaluate what it is you really want before you start looking for a location.

Key figures and tips Dreaming of owning a bed and breakfast in Europe? Check out these important facts and figures about the reality. If you want to start a bed and breakfast in Europe, then success stands or falls by the preparations. While most European countries have opened up their borders and have the euro as their currency, they still have their own language, mentality and culture. The legislation also differs per country. A few key figures and tips. Shared sanitary provisions are relatively less common: If one of the two partners has a job on the side, then you should think of three to four rooms. Especially northern Europeans attach great value to a beautiful bathroom with decent sanitary, so large investments in the accommodation might be needed. Before you go head over heels and buy a house, remember that these villages can get pretty deserted when the high season is over. Facilities such as hospitals and schools are often far away. Visit the location that you have in mind during wintertime as well and decide whether you will also be happy there during that season. A bed and breakfast in a popular location has more chance of success. In Rome or Barcelona you can expect more visitors than in a village in the German Ruhr area or the Flemish countryside. Besides, these rules can differ per region and municipality. Get to know the rules regarding construction permits, fire safety, hygiene, offering meals, serving alcohol, taxes, financing and so on, well in advance. Check with the municipality you wish to move to, as well as with the Chamber of Commerce. Registering with the embassy is an option as well. Starting a bed and breakfast in Europe: That way you appeal to guests from all of Europe. Mention which languages you speak on your website. Collaborate with the locals. Refer guests to local restaurants for example, and purchase products from local suppliers. Do you have a chore or work to be done, outsource it to a local company. Being a newcomer this will result into a lot of goodwill. Talk to the locals a lot, and make sure they get to know you. Guests highly appreciate an extensive organic breakfast with local and homemade products. A good bed of course goes without saying. This is a guest post by Bedandbreakfast.

3: Starting a bed and breakfast in Europe: Key figures and tips - The B&B Coach

A successful bed and breakfast owner will need to know how to plan for cash flow, hire and manage staff, strategize to maintain maximum occupancy rates, and negotiate with contractors and suppliers, to name but a few of the business-related tasks that will be required.

Day-to-day You might be working within the comfort of your own home, but running a bed and breakfast is no easy feat. Expect very early mornings everything has to be ready for when guests wake up and say goodbye to weekends and most ventures out as someone always has to be on-hand should a guest need you. Day-to-day activities will be repetitive: Above all, your job is to make sure guests enjoy themselves and want to come back again, or at least recommend to others. The industry and market The UK tourism industry is one of the largest in the world, comprising of around , businesses, employing 1. Great customer care skills, and always happy to go the extra mile. Enjoy looking after others. Keen cleaner and tidier. Premises Are you going to buy an established business, purchase and customise a new building, or renovate your existing home? Each option has its advantages, but buying an established business is usually the most hassle-free. It will cost more to purchase, but will already have a client base and so need little spent on marketing or renovation. It will also be easier to get finance from the bank if you can prove the business is successful. If you decide to purchase a house and build the business from scratch, consider the size carefully. This is important for your business too, because guests will feel uncomfortable if they have to share space with your family. Your premises will be furnished differently depending on how you market your business. Are you a value-for-money getaway, or a luxurious retreat? Whatever your choice, make it clear on your advertisements what you offer. Make sure you have sufficient parking spaces nearby and are well positioned for guests to visit local attractions. Avoid noisy roads, too, but not so much that guests would be scared to walk back alone at night. Of course, as soon as you look at buying a property, you need to be thinking about mortgages. Staff need to be able to take on a variety of roles: Ideally, your employees should be able to do everything you can do, to allow you some time away from the business. All staff must have excellent customer service skills, because the happier your guests are, the more likely they are to refer you to their friends. This is an important way to get bookings in the tourism industry. More rooms may mean more guests, but they also mean more furnishing, more utility bills, and more staff. Look at sites like Business for Sale. If needs be, stay with family or live in rented accommodation until you find your new business, otherwise you could miss out because the sale of your property took too long. Accurate records must be kept of all outgoings for when the time comes to pay tax. They can keep an eye on spending and help you avoid any nasty surprises. A chunk of your initial funds will go on insurance, and you will need most of the following:
