Licensing Permits and Taxes for Festival Craft Show and Art Fair Vendors October Taking the time up front to ensure you meet all legal requirements for your business will save you time and money in the long-run. The three areas to pay attention to are: Permits In almost all instances you will need a license in order to sell at craft fairs and shows. The show promoter will usually list the necessary requirements on their applications. You can also check with both the city and state fairly simply. The following government site is free and provides links to almost all the state sites you need to find the licenses. This is the number you receive when you registered your business as a sole proprietorship, LLC, corporation etc. Although the procedure may differ slightly from state to state, in most states you can apply for a state sales tax license online at the state government website or you can pick up an application at your local county office. There is no charge for the form or for the sales tax license. It typically does not take long to receive your sales tax license, but want to apply well in advance of your first show. It will be mailed to you and is usually good for one year. In addition, in most cases, it will renew each year that you pay your sales taxes. The amount of sales tax varies among the states. Know the exact tax rate of the states where you conduct business and collect them. Usually, you pay sales taxes on a monthly, quarterly or annual basis, depending on your gross sales in that state. In some cities there are also county and municipal sales taxes, that addition to state sales tax. They may even require a temporary sales license. It is a good idea to check with show organizers to determine all the requirements for selling at a particular show. PERMITS While this is not the case with all shows and fairs, in some areas you may need a permit in order to sell in that local area or municipality. If you are not sure and you are attending a show for the first time, it is always a good idea to contact the show organizers and find out whether you are required to obtain a permit. It is always better to check on this in advance and make certain that you know what is required before you arrive and discover that you do not have all of the required paperwork. If you are selling food, you will have additional state, county and city health regulations, permits and inspections you may have to consider. Again, the show promoter should be very aware of the requirements all vendors must meet and most likely can provide contact the permits.

2: Do I Need to Register for Sales Tax?

If you are in the business of performing repair and maintenance services to real property, you are required to register for sales tax. This includes services such as: These include sales of: These lists are just examples of the types of sales that are subject to sales tax, and do not include every kind of sale that will require you to register for sales tax. If you will be making any of these types of sales, you must register for sales tax purposes. This is true whether you make these sales on a regular basis or just occasionally, or whether you have a storefront or sell out of your home. Out-of-state businesses If you are located outside of New York State and have customers in New York State, you may have to register as a vendor for New York State and local sales tax purposes. For example, you must register for sales tax if: In addition, businesses located outside of New York State that are affiliated with a vendor in New York State may also be required to register to collect and remit sales tax. Whether a New York business and an out-of-state seller are affiliated is based on an ownership test. Wholesalers If your business will be selling tangible personal property to other wholesalers or retailers, you must register for sales tax purposes in order to issue and accept most exemption certificates. Manufacturers Manufacturing includes a variety of operations, including manufacturing and processing, along with mining and extracting. In most cases, manufacturers do not have to collect sales tax on the sales that they make, because the products will later be resold. However, a manufacturer must register for sales tax for other reasons. Manufacturers must be registered for sales tax to accept resale certificates from their customers, and to buy certain items such as raw materials, machinery, equipment and electricity used in production without paying sales tax. Show and entertainment promoters If you plan on doing business as a show or entertainment promoter but will not be making any sales of taxable tangible personal property or taxable services, you do not have to register for a sales tax Certificate of Authority. Some promoters may have to register as both a promoter and a vendor. If you are operating as a show or entertainment promoter and will be engaging in other activities such as renting tables and chairs to vendors, you will need to also register to collect and remit sales tax due on the rental of tangible personal property. Sales made by exempt organizations Special rules apply to sales made by exempt organizations such as religious and charitable organizations, and public and private school groups. At-home businesses If you operate a trade or business from your home, you have the same responsibilities as any other vendor making the same types of taxable sales in New York State. Whether you run your business from a store or your home, or whether you work full time or part time is not what determines your requirement to be registered for sales tax. Instead, whether or not you are required to register is based on what types of items you sell, or what kind of services you provide. If the items or services that you sell are subject to sales tax, you are required to register. This also includes items that you sell on a regular basis through online auction or other Web sites. Some examples of typical businesses that people run out of their homes that are subject to sales tax include:

Older US coins differ. Portrait – Probably the defining item of the coin is the portrait on the Obverse side. Relief – This refers to any part of a coin that is raised and not the field. Rim – The outer edge that is slightly raised making coins easier to stack and serves as protection for the face of the coin. Tools of the Trade As you get more and more serious about coin collecting, you will eventually want to invest in some coin collecting supplies and tools to assemble your collection. While not an exhaustive list, the items below will serve you well in becoming a more efficient and thorough coin collector: These are essential for identifying the value of a coin, detecting flaws, faults, checking for error coins, as well as spotting counterfeits. Most collectors prefer between 10x – 20x magnification. I highly suggest you buy a pair of soft cotton gloves to use when holding a coin. Also, always hold the coin around the edges and not on the face, especially if you are not using gloves. The dirt and oil from the skin can be destructive to the coin. Apart from that book, most of the information you will need can easily be found online. Even the Red Book is outdated once it goes to press, and sites such as PCGS will have all the pricing needs you are looking. For storage you can use albums, folders, display boxes, coin binders, coin flips, coin tubes, as well as coin slabs. Below are some sample coins on a variety of grades for the Washington quarter. Images courtesy of ha. Below that is a table that shows the grading scale, abbreviations, and description of each state. Sheldon Coin Grading Scale At the heart of finding quality coins and getting a good deal is understanding how to grade coins. Half science half art, the skill of grading coins can be learned with time and use. The only way to get better at this is to practice, practice, practice. Take your loupe and magnifier and go and visit coin shows and shops to see examples of how different coins are graded. When trying to determine the value of a coin try to see multiple coins in the same grade and rarity you are after. Especially before you make a big purchase you will want to see many different grades of that same coin to ensure you are getting what you paid for. Rarity Scale Following in the footsteps of the coin grading scale, there is also a Universal Rarity Scale that was developed in by Q. David Bowers , a famous numismatist. This was to better assess the rarity of a coin quickly and accurately. Strikes are usually placed in several categories such as weak, average, above average, and full strike. A full strike is the highest and sharpest strike. It is a combination of sheen, contrast, brilliance, and cartwheel, or the rotating windmill effect on the surface. This can include any and all marks, hairlines, bagmarks, general mishandling, and any other marks made during minting. Location and severity of the mark will determine how much it will impact the grade. For example, a deep scratch on the reverse side of the coin off to the side is not as severe than a deep scratch on the main portrait on the obverse. This is because one person may find the coin below very attractive and appealing while another may not like it at all. You will find tones are much more important and strong in copper and silver coins than in gold coins. While it may seem subjective, eye appeal to the experienced collector comes naturally with time and experience. They are amazing, positive, above average, neutral, below average, negative, and ugly. For some sample images of the above grades you can visit PCGS. Eye appeal can vastly differentiate the price on two coins with the same technical grade. For example, 2 Morgan silver dollars graded as XF can yield different sell prices based on the toning or colors that the coins display. Knowing this beyond the grade can be extremely useful in appraising a coin. This goes along well with the tip to specialize and focus to know the nuisances of that group of coins. Where to Buy or Find Coins for your Collection To find and buy coins for your collection there are many different places you can look. You can treasure hunt by going to local banks, convenient stores, or credit unions and asking for coin rolls. Another way you can treasure hunt is to go to your local flea markets and garage sales. At flea markets you can find anything and everything, possibly someone who came upon a coin collection and is looking to get rid of it. The same with garage sales, people looking to raise some money many times will offer their old coin collections they started long ago or was passed down from family to family. You can find garage sales in your area by using gsalr. Their mission and vision statement is to make the hobby safe for collectors and hobbyists.

To find a local PNG Dealer just use their online directory here. You can trust these guys, to be a member you have to have the following criteria met: Another great way to browse coins and collections is through coin shows. You can find most any and every type of coin at these events as well as sharpen your coin grading skills. Local coin shops are another avenue to find and browse coins to possibly add to your collection. Finally, in this day in age, buying coins online is commonplace. All About Coin Care Safe handling of your coins will guarantee the quality and value of your coin collection for many years to come. Taking the time to study, research, and invest in coins only to mishandle or damage them is not something you want to happen. Below are some simple coin care tips that you can follow to protect your coins from damage. Attempting to clean your coins will many times do more damage than good, especially if they are uncirculated. Cleaning coins even with just soap and a small cloth can cause micro abrasions and strip the coin of its tone and luster ultimately lowering the technical grade. The only exception to this rule is freshly dug up coins from the ground or through metal detecting. Handling Coins When handling coins, you should never touch the face of the coin and should hold the coin by its edges between the thumb and forefinger. Using cotton gloves or tongs can also help in minimizing the possibility of damaging your coin. Other Tips Other tips on proper care for you coin collection is to never talk over or spit on your coins. Holding a coin in front of you while talking can allow tiny parts of saliva to land on your coin unknowingly and cause small spots or blemishes that are hard to remove. Many a mint coin has been ruined in this way.

It was originally worn as a status symbol for the rich and affluent. Over the years, the Fashion Jewelry Industry has made it affordable for everyone to enhance their appearance or just feel good about themselves. Today, The Lauren Jewelry Collection provides the opportunity for the independent retailer and the independent wholesale distributor to participate in one of the most profitable businesses in existence. Statistically, earrings outsell all other jewelry items at a ratio of 10 to 1. Earrings are the leading "Impulse Purchase" in comparison to all other accessory items. Impulse purchases are unaffected by slow economic conditions. If priced properly sales will prosper during a poor economic period. Made in America All of our Products have always been and will always be made in America. The tradition of quality and pride in craftsmanship in American Jewelry has been a part of our culture dating back to the American Revolution. The Silent Salesmen Your displays are your "silent salesmen" that work for you non-stop, as long as your stores are open. All they do is display and "sell" your jewelry for you. All you do is visit them on a regular basis, collect the profits they have generated and replace the jewelry they sold for you. As a Lauren Jewelry Collection Representative you can place displays on "consignment" or have the retail accounts set up for you. Using consignment, retailers have no initial cash outlay. They have nothing to lose. When displayed properly and restocked consistently, the product sells itself. We concentrate on small to medium size "independent" retailers. A selection of sites with high female traffic is the key to good weekly sales. You operate the business under your own business name. The Lauren Jewelry Collection, Inc. There are many retail outlets where you can realize high weekly profits! We have learned what accounts will produce the best returns for The Lauren Jewelry Collection representatives. Better yet, they are establishments where you have no outside competition! These are the kind of accounts that will deliver growth to your monthly profits, and that is, after all, what counts the most! The following stores represent a sampling of businesses that are prime locations for successfully marketing our product. Selling to independent retail establishments on a consignment basis is an easy way to do business and allows us to control the profit margin. This provides a fast turn over, higher sales volume and the end result consumer can take advantage of a recognizable bargain. This marketing philosophy is the cornerstone of our success.
