We probably should have Here are my comments from when we got through the first half three years ago: We are, to say the least, having conflict issues in our house. I bought this book to work through with my two children in hope that the sibling fighting and whining and yelling might be somewhat diminished as a result. The author was a teacher and school counselor for a total of fifteen years. I personally would not use it with middle school students. I think most would find it too condescending. I am now working through the book separately and at different times with each child because trying to do it with both at same time just led to fights. It retells the stories you read with comics and has a few activities. My kids like the comics, but the activities are incredibly lame. They are poorly thought out and drawn up, either overly simplistic and repetitive or difficult to do for various reasons, such as a crossword lacking numbers. We usually end up skipping the activities or just using them for discussion fodder. The discussion questions are often of a nature that make them difficult to respond to either because one would be regurgitating the obvious or, on the opposite hand, because they are too open-ended for a young child. I often skip or modify the questions, and we do not do the role playing at all, though that may work in a group setting. So far, I do think working through this has been at least somewhat helpful. I actually heard my kids resolve a conflict peaceably yesterday morning. Will you forgive me? Please be more careful next time. My daughter is certainly learning the vocabulary in this book, even if she is far from consistently applying its lessons in actual practice. On a car ride home from the pool, this conversation occurred " Son: More so with my 8-year-old daughter than my 6-year-old son. My daughter is quite interested in working through the book and asks to work on it almost daily. The book would be useful for a homeschooling parent or a private Christian school as well as the individual Christian parent. It would be good for these skills to be taught in public school as well, but the explicitly Christian content and frequent Bible verses would rule out direct use of this material. However, it could potentially be modified for use in such a setting, and I understand the author has worked with public school teachers on the issue of conflict resolution.

Use these twenty-five ideas to shake up your book-related activities. Most of the activities are adaptable across grade levels and are flexible enough for whole-group, small group, or individual assignments. Write a different ending for the book. Pretend you are a talk show host and interview the main character. Create a travel brochure for the setting of the story or scrapbook pages about key characters. Create a book jacket, including illustrations, an enticing synopsis, author bio, and favorable reviews. Summarize the book into a comic or story aimed for younger students or your classmates. Write a news article about an important event from the book. Write about the decisions you would make if you were the main character in the book. Dramatize a scene from the story with other students or using puppets. Choose two characters from the story and write a conversation they might have. Write a letter or email to a close friend recommending the book you have just read. Make a list of new, unusual, or interesting words or phrases found in your book. Prepare a television commercial about your book. Act out the commercial for your classmates. Write ten chat room-style questions that could be used to start an online discussion about the book. Make sure you provide a list of answers. Explain why you think this book will or will not be read years from now. Support your opinion by stating specific events in the story. Discuss one particular episode in the story that you remember most. Describe why you think it remains so clear to you. Address it to the publisher and mail it. Or, see if the author has a website and email it. Write a ballad or song about the characters and events in your story. Set the words to the music of a popular song and sing it to the class. Give a dramatic reading of a scene in the book to your classmates. Describe in detail three characters from the story. Design a poster or new book cover depicting the climax of the story. Write an acrostic poem about the book using the letters in the title of the book or the name of a character or author. Draw a classroom mural depicting a major scene s from the book. After reading an informational book, make a scrapbook about the topics. These ideas were adapted from November!
