Programs Admission The applicant must meet the requirements of the Graduate School as outlined in the University Catalog. An undergraduate grade point average of 3. Students lacking such preparation may be admitted to the M. South Asian languages in which specializations are offered at the University are Sanskrit and Hindi. Prospective applicants to this program should be aware that there is also an M. Jackson School of International Studies. These two South Asia-focused programs are partially overlapping, but have significantly different emphases. The Jackson School South Asia program is intended for students who are more interested in a general interdisciplinary area studies program, particularly though not exclusively with an emphasis on the social sciences. Advisers Students should request an adviser within one year and one term of the beginning of their program; if no adviser is requested within that period, one will be assigned. Each student is expected to work out a course of study with the adviser which concentrates on areas pertinent to the language specialization e. In addition, all students are required to comply with the rules and procedures of the Department of Asian Languages and Literature copies of which are available from the Department. Students are required to complete language study through the fourth-year level in their major language. At least 18 of the 45 credits must be taken at the level or above. The language requirements in this program are the same as in the non-thesis program. In addition, the student must write an acceptable M. Foreign Language Requirements Students must demonstrate competence in their major South Asian language. Program Normally, entry into the program is contingent upon successful completion of the M. Students with sufficient background, usually the successful completion of a relevant M. Students who have completed an M. If not, these must be satisfied as the student moves toward the Ph. Often, course work will continue to be appropriate. One of these two research languages must be a European language. Students are also required to pass three written field examinations, at least two of which must fall within the general purview of South Asian languages and literature. The third can have as its subject an adjacent field or discipline, if the candidate so chooses--an aspect of South Asian history or art history, for example. Once these field examinations have been satisfactorily completed, the student is eligible to take a two hour comprehensive oral examination, administered by his or her supervisory committee.
