Read the book Henry and Mudge: Then explain the meaning: The subject of a sentence is the person, place, thing, or idea that is doing or being something. The predicate is the part of the sentence that tells what the subject is or does. Then choose some of the sentences from the book to analyze. Write them on the board and call on students to find the subject and the predicate. Here are some examples. Subjects have a single line and predicates have a double line: Henry thought Mudge would be with him always. When Henry was at school, Mudge just lay around and waited. They ate breakfast at the same time. Remember that it can be a person, place, thing or idea. The brown dog, Mother, The girl in the pink dress, The striped ball, The white fluffy cloud, etc. When completed put the subject strips of paper in one container and the predicate strips in another container. Each student should take one strip of paper from each container. Take turns reading the subject and predicate together as one sentence. You will have some crazy sentences and laughs while learning. Make sure each sentence has a subject and a predicate. Trade papers with a partner the next day. Circle the subjects in red and the predicates in green. Share with the class.
