The Symphonic Variations (Variations symphoniques), M. 46, is a work for piano and orchestra written in by César Franck. www.enganchecubano.com has been described as "one of Franck's tightest and most finished works", "a superb blending of piano and orchestra", and "a flawless work and as near perfection as a human composer can hope to get in a work of this nature".

To some extent that was true. But the Ashton embrace was soon to end. The last performances of The Dream by the Australian Ballet were in 1998. The result was worth all the logistical effort. Robyn Hendricks was the pivotal figure in Symphonic Variations, not only because of her central position on stage but also because she epitomised the grandeur and solemnity of the ballet. Hendricks, a soloist, and the principals, Amber Scott and Ako Kondo, looked magnificent in the white tunics that have stood the test of time with their elegance and simplicity. Click image for larger version Symphonic Variations is serene on the outside but as busy as a knitting machine on the inside. Those Greek sculpture poses, with one foot placed elegantly over the other, offer little respite from the fast footwork, changes of direction and turns, in which the eyes look upwards rather than focussing at a spot. The casting of the ballet, and the entire Ashton program, was interesting. Several dancers from the lower ranks were given the opportunity to dance on opening night. For the dancers the chance to shine must have been both exciting but intimidating, especially in a work such as Symphonic Variations that demands exactitude and finesse. The men were secure as they danced alone, especially Brett Chynoweth who flew so high in his jetes that he seemed to be aiming for a personal best, but in their partnering there was sometimes a tentative approach, perhaps due to the challenge of dancing in one of the most demanding ballets in the repertoire on opening night. Natasha Kusen was well cast as the goddess-like centrepiece, lifted, turned this way and that, and upside down by the men Brett Simon and Jared Wright. Kusen has both the beautiful feet and a stunning arabesque that the choreography demands. After the white abstraction of Symphonic Variations and Monotones II came The Dream, all prettiness and playfulness, focussing on the yes-no romance of Oberon and Titania. Madeleine Eastoe excels in Romantic roles such as Giselle and La Sylphide but her depiction of Titania was as feisty as it was delicate and fragile. In The Dream, romanticism becomes eroticism when Titania is swung in the arms of Oberon, Kevin Jackson in their final pas de deux. Corps de ballet dancer, Joseph Chapman, was delightful as he trotted and hopped in his shoe-hooves. The corps de ballet of fairies was well coached by Carr and the lovers, Helena, Hermia, Demetrius and Lysander Kusen, Hendricks, Jacob Sofer and Rudy Hawkes were charming as they found their way to emerge from confusion to a happy conclusion. His jumps are a work of art in themselves. How Ashton would have loved his performance.
