Only 16 of the remaining 20 episodes were aired in when ABC canceled the show. The Family Channel later produced four two-hour TV movies that were broadcast from to Though Lucas intended to produce episodes leading up to a year-old Jones, the series was cancelled with the character at age New footage was shot in to be incorporated with the newly re-edited and re-titled "chapters" to better help it chronologically and provide smooth transitions. The newly shot Tangiers, was joined with Egypt, from the Curse of the Jackal to form My First Adventure, and Morocco, was joined with Northern Italy, now re-dated as to form Tales of Innocence. Also included in the home video release were four unaired episodes made for the ABC network: Florence, May ; Prague, ; Transylvania, ; and Palestine, The series was labeled as Chapters 1â€”22, while the feature films were labeled as Chapters 23â€” The episode was chosen for the fact that its plot continues into the opening of Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom , which was labeled as the first film chronologically in the film trilogy. DVD[edit] In , series producer Rick McCallum confirmed in an interview with Variety that DVDs of the series were in development, but would not be released for "about three or four years". Episode III â€” Revenge of the Sith DVD, McCallum explained that he expected the release to consist of 22 DVDs, which would include around documentaries which would explore the real-life historical aspects that are fictionalized in the show. This, along with efforts to get best quality masters and bonus materials on the sets, delayed the release. A new division of History. As Paramount and Lucasfilm had already reserved IndianaJones. Lucas and McCallum hope that the DVDs will be helpful to schools, as they believe the series is a good way to aid in teaching history. Each documentary covers a historical topic connected to the chapter to which it is associated. The television broadcast rights for these documentaries was secured by the History Channel. The show is a survivor - not even a year hiatus could stop it. It has aired on three different radio stations in the Seattle area. Since it has also been syndicated nationally and now, internationally. Like many private eyes, Harry started out as a cop. When his beautiful blues-singer wife is killed in a nightclub shooting, Harry goes into a major tailspin. He resigns from the police force after exposing corruption at a Chicago precinct. After piling up substantial gambling debts, he hits rock-bottom and agrees to travel to L. The "little favor" involves the murder of a rival crime boss. He manages not to do the deed and ends up staying on the West Coast, working as a private eye, first in Los Angeles, and later, in Seattle. Harry is definitely not a hard-boiled P. This guy can be tough when he has to be. He cares about his clients and his greatest strength is his humanity. If you get in a tight spot, you want a guy like Harry in your corner. Harry started out without a partner. She was initially attracted to the supposed glamour of the P. In a interview with this writer, Phil Harper, the actor who plays Harry, mentioned that he used his remembrances of some of the great radio detectives as inspiration for his portrayal. And The Adventures of Harry Nile is no exception. Seattle-area actors have the majority of roles on the series, but several nationally-known television stars have appeared, including: While most new Jim French shows are recorded at his Bellevue studio, Jim currently records at least 2 new radio dramas every three months before a live audience at the Kirkland Performance Center in Kirkland, WA. One of these shows is normally an episode of The Adventures of Harry Nile. In June, , the first Imagination Theatre recording session was held there and was sold out two weeks in advance. And this sell-out was without advertising. The next recording date was Monday, September 18, - another sellout. Information about upcoming recording sessions can be found at the Kirkland Performance Center web site. Gordy Donnell wrote "Dooms Day Book. Pat French and Jim French Producer: Incidental music by Michael Lynch Sound Effects: Nick Bolano Guest Stars: The first four episodes first aired on Crisis. He was sort of a Sherlock Holmes and he would solve all kinds of mysteries that would confound adults. The storylines went something like this: These are two of the smallest countries in Africa that border each other. You get the point: So when Ethiopian Airlines lost my bag, I was incredulous. I mean, we checked our bags in together; they rode down the conveyor belt right next to each other. So when we waited for my baggage until the baggage claim carousel stopped, we immediately went to the lost baggage room and filed a claim. That in itself took about an hour and a half. That was five days ago. The guy was actually trying to help me out, so I was thankful for that. Luckily, Rwanda is on the up and up in relation to other African countries. Even more fortunate for me, Greg is about my size and has generously offered me access to his wardrobe. Otherwise this would not have been pretty. But I found the key. And email to the higher ups. Yesterday I went to the Ethiopian Airlines website and found the customer service email. Not only this but I found the Kigali Ethiopian Airlines email. And that I was surprised that this was acceptable to Ethiopian Airlines considering the value they place on taking care of their customers which I read off their website looking for any leverage I could find. This touched off a maelstrom of emails between Entebbe, Kigali, Addis Ababa and the airlines headquarters. Until the emails started flying around there was an overall sense of complacency. This all changed when a senior officer for customer service got involved. So for me it was fun to watch people finally get moving. What was it to me that they were stumbling all over themselves because headquarters was now in the loop? Encyclopedia Brown may have used different tactics but I got the results I was looking for. Amazingly my bag has been tentatively, I say found. Where has it been you may ask? How it got there I have no idea. What I said to her was generally speaking, nice. But suffice to say she sounded pretty apologetic about the whole affair by the time I got up and left. Come tomorrow afternoon I am supposed to be reunited with my luggage. Whether or not it actually is my luggage, and if it still has our camera in it, is the wildcard. Others here in the house think it will return to me unmolested, while others myself included think it may not be my bag at all. The heat from headquarters can make some people say anything.

This feels like déjà vu, all over again. When I got to baggage claim, most of my fellow passengers' and my suitcase were gone. There was, however, one lone abandoned suitcase left on the carousel. Peter believes that I have a super-human, cosmic ability to change the course of reality merely by my words. Traffic is really light. Apparently, my words are just that powerful. I suggested to the United Airlines representative that perhaps someone had mistakenly taken my red suitcase instead of their own. Actually, that scenario seemed pretty obvious. I know, I know. I did, however, have a suitcase disappear. This time the action took place in Boston. I was waiting to take the silver-line bus from Logan Airport to North Station and engaging in one of my very favorite pastimes: One group in particular that caught my attention was a family made up of a couple of kids, a couple of moms and dads and a grandma. I was drawn to them because of the sweet way they all acted toward the grandma. Finally, the bus arrived and I hopped on along with hordes of other passengers. Although standing near the back of the bus, I tried to keep a keen eye on my suitcase in the rack up front. Until the nice old lady behind me tapped my shoulder and asked how many more stops she had before arriving at North Station. We were engaged in conversation for just a few minutes but when I turned back around I saw that my suitcase—the same red suitcase—was gone. I rode to the end of the line trying to figure out a plan. After all the other passengers had exited the bus I noticed that there remained one unclaimed suitcase—a red one. That feeling was the only thing I had to go on so I decided to try to find them, an outlandish plan that still seemed more promising than a trip to the MBTA lost and found. I was pretty sure I knew which stop they got off at and I suspected they were staying at one of the two hotels near that T stop. I rode the T back to the stop, dragging what I hoped was their suitcase with me. Otherwise, I was going to have to explain to someone why I stole a bag off the silver line bus. I entered the first hotel, walked up to the front desk and told my story. That was going to be my last, best chance before admitting defeat in my first ever adventure in detective work. I kid you not. The look on their collective faces as I strolled in with their suitcase was that of total confusion and delight. They asked how on earth I had found them. I mumbled something about a lucky guess that the owner must be someone at the hotel, blah, blah, blah. I did not want to say that it was because I am hyper-observant, bordering on stalkerish, and had been watching them since leaving Logan Airport. It was a happy ending all around. They were in town for a wedding and were thrilled to be reunited with their luggage, containing fancy attire for the festivities. I was delighted to have my hands on my suitcase and the two bottles of wine inside. Plus I was pretty darn proud of my work as a sleuth. My precious red bag has come home. Have you ever lost a suitcase? Or donned your detective hat to solve a case?
